arteriococcygeal (ār-tē'ri-ō-kok-sij'ē-al), a. [Gr arteria + coccygeal] In anat, pertaining to arteries and to the coccyx specifically applied to the glomerulus arteriococcygeus, or Luschka's gland. See gland and glomulus.

arteriogram (ar-tē'ri-ō-gram), n. [Gr ἀρτηρία, artery, + γραφία, a writing.] A sphygmographic tracing or pulse-curve from an artery, a sphygmogram taken from an artery.

arteriography (ar-tē'ri-ōg'ra-fi), n. [Gr ἀρτηρία, artery, + -γραφία, < γραφειν, write, describe.] A description of the arterial system.

arteriola (ar-tē'ri-ō-la), n; pl arterioles (-lē) [NL] In anat, a little artery, an arteriole. — Arterioles rectae, small straight arteries supplying the medullary pyramids of the kidneys.

arteriole (ar-tē'ri-ōl), n. [= F artériole, < NL arteriola, dim of L arteria, artery.] A small artery.

The minute arteries, the arterioles of some distant organ like the brain. B. H. Richardson, Practical Med, p. 407.

arteriology (ar-tē'ri-ō-lō-jī), n. [Gr ἀρτηρία, artery, + -λογία, < λογειν, speak see -ology] The science of or a treatise on the arteries.

arteriosclerosis (ar-tē'ri-ō-sklē-ro'sis), n. [NL, < Gr ἀρτηρία, artery, + σκληρωσις, hardening see sclerosis] The increase of connective tissue in the walls of arteries, especially in the intima.

arteriotome (ar-tē'ri-ō-tōm), n. [Gr as if ἀρτηριότομος* see arteriotomy] In surg, an instrument for opening an artery.

arteriotomy (ar-tē'ri-ō-tō-mī), n. [L arteriolum, < Gr ἀρτηριότομος, the cutting of an artery (cf ἀρτηριότομος, cut an artery), < ἀρτηρία, artery, + τομή, verbal adj of τέμνειν, temnein, cut.] 1 In surg, the opening of an artery by the lancet or other instrument, for the purpose of letting blood — 2 That part of the science of anatomy which treats of the dissection of the arteries.

arteritis (ar-te-ri'tis), n. [NL, < Gr ἀρτηρία, artery, + -itis] Inflammation of an artery or of the arteries.

artery (ar'te-ri), n, pl arteries (-riz). [ME arterie (early ME also arter, artere, artur, arture, etc., < OF artere, mod F artère = Fr Sp Art It arteria), < L arteria, the windpipe, an artery, < Gr ἀρτηρία, an artery as distinct from a vein, but commonly the arteries were regarded as air-ducts (the name being supposed to come from ἀήρ, air), because found empty after death, and seem to have been conceived as ramifications of the windpipe; orig the windpipe, perhaps < ἀνέμω, anēmō, raise, lift up, cf aorta, from the same source.] 1† The trachea or windpipe.

Under the artery or windpipe is the mouth of the stomach. Sir H. Holland.

2 One of a system of cylindrical, membranous, elastic, and muscular vessels or tubes, which convey the blood from the heart to all parts of the body by ramifications which as they proceed diminish in size and increase in number, and terminate in minute capillaries which unite the ends of the arteries with the beginnings of the veins. There are two principal arteries, the aorta, which rises from the left ventricle of the heart and ramifies through the whole body, and the pulmonary artery which conveys venous blood from the right ventricle to the lungs, to undergo arterialization. Most arteries are composed of three coats, an outer or fibrous, of condensed connective tissue well supplied with blood vessels and nerves, a middle or elastic consisting chiefly of circular, non striated muscular fibers, and an inner, thin, smooth, and dense, composed, from without inward, of an elastic sequestered membrane, a layer of connective tissue and a lining of endothelium. The outer coat is the (tunica) adventitia, the middle, the (tunica) media, the inner, the (tunica) intima. The arteries in the human body which have received special names are about 350 in number. They range in caliber from more than the thickness of a finger to microscopic dimensions.

3 A main channel in any ramifying system of communication, as in drainage — Artery-claw, a locking forceps for holding an artery — Artery of the bulb, a small but surgically important branch of the internal pudic artery, supplying the bulb of the urethra — Axillary artery, coronary artery, nutrient artery, radial artery, etc. See the adjectives.

artery (ār'te-ri), v t, pret, and pp arteried, ppr arterying [Gr arteria, n.] To supply with arteries, figuratively, to traverse like arteries.

Great rivers that arteried every State.

N. A. Rev, CXXVI, 491. Artesian (ār-tē'gian), a. [F artésien, properly pertaining to Artois, OF Artois, anciently Artesium, in France.] Pertaining to Artois, an ancient province of northern France, corresponding to the modern department of Pas-de-Calais — Artesian well, a name (usually without a capital letter) given to a peculiar kind of bored well from its long use in Artois.

Artesian Well
a, a, fault filled with clay and impervious to water; b, b, impermeable strata; c, permeable strata; d, d, artesian boring and well.

In an artesian well proper the water rises to the surface and overflows. The geological conditions permitting this are not general, since it is necessary that the region should have a more or less complete basin structure and that there should be a series of permeable covered by impermeable beds. In the United States any deep bored well is called artesian, even if the water has to be pumped from a considerable depth. Artesian wells vary in depth from less than 100 to nearly 4,000 feet some of the deepest borings being for petroleum.

artful (ar'tful), a. [Gr art + -ful] 1 Done with or characterized by art or skill. [Rare.]

Our palms with artful terms inscribed. Milton, P. R., iv, 395.

No one thinks when he looks at a plant, what restless activity is at work within it, for the cells perform their artful labor in stillness. Pop. Sci. Mo., XXII, 185.

2† Artificial, as opposed to natural, produced or produced by art as, "too artful a writer," Dryden, Life of Virgil — 3 Skilful (a) Of persons, skilful in adapting means to ends, adroit. (b) Of things, skilfully adapted, ingenious, clever. Hence — 4 Cunning, crafty, practising or characterized by art or stratagem as, "the Artful Dodger," Dickens, Oliver Twist.

Fair to no purpose, artful to no end. Pop., Moral Essays, iv, 116.

— Syn. 4. Cunning, Artful, Sly, etc. (see cunning), deceitful, politic, shifts, insidious. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

artfully (ar'tful-i), adv. In an artful manner. (a) With art or skill as, colors artfully distributed on the canvas. [Rare.] (b) With cunning or craft, craftily, cunningly.

Whether this motion was honestly made by the Opposition or artfully made by the courtiers, it is now impossible to discover. Macaulay, Hist. Eng., vi.

artfulness (ar'tful-nes), n. The quality of being artful, craft, cunning, address.

arthra, n. Plural of arthron.

arthral (ar'thral), a. [Gr arthron + -al.] Of or pertaining to an arthron or articulation, articular as, "the arthral surface of the ilium," Wilder and Gage.

arthralgia (ar-thral'jī-ā), n. [NL, < Gr ἄρθρον, joint, + ἀλγος, pain.] Pain in a joint, specifically, neuralgia in a joint.

arthralgic (ar-thral'jik), a. Pertaining to arthralgia.

arthrombolus (ār-throm'bō-lus), n. [NL, < Gr ἄρθρον, joint, + βολός, a putting in place, the setting of a limb, < ἐμβαλεῖν, thrust in see embolus] In surg, an instrument formerly used in the reduction of dislocations. Dunghison.

arthria, n. Plural of arthrum.

arthritic (ar-thrit'ik), a. [ME artetike, < OF artetique, < L arthriticus, < Gr ἀρθριτικός, of the joints, gouty, < ἀρθρις see arthrosis] Pertaining to the joints, or to arthritis, or specifically to the gout, affecting the joints.

Pangs arthritic, that infect the toe. Of libertine excess. Cowper, The Task, i.

arthritical (ar-thrit'ī-ka), a. Same as arthritic.

arthritis (ar-thri'tis), n. [L, < Gr ἀρθρις (see vōs, disease), joint-disease, gout, proper fem adj, of the joints, < ἄρθρον, a joint see arthron.] Inflammation of a joint — Arthritis deformans, rheumatoid arthritis in which considerable deformity is produced. See rheumatoid.

arthrum (ar'thri-um), n; pl arthria (-ē). [NL, < Gr as if ἀρθριον*, dim of ἄρθρον, a joint.] In entom, the minute penultimate tarsal joint of many Coleoptera.

arthrobranchia (ar-thrō-brang'ki-ā), n, pl. arthrobranchiae (-ē). [NL, < Gr ἄρθρον, a joint, + βράγχια, gills.] In Crustacea, a distinct respiratory appendage of the maxillipeds. Huxley.

arthrocacology (ar'thrō-ka-kol'ō-jī), n. [Gr arthrocace + -ology, q. v.] The sum of human knowledge concerning diseases of the joints.

arthroderm (ăr-thrō-dĕrm), n. [Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint, + δέρμα, skin] The crust or body-wall of an articulate animal, as the shell of a crab or the integument of an insect. A. S. Packard arthrodia (ăr-thrō-dī-ă), n. [pl. arthrodiæ (-ē). [NL., < Gr. ἀρθρία, a particular kind of articulation, < ἀρθρῶν, articulated, < ἄρθρον, a joint, + εἶδος, form] A gliding joint, a movable articulation formed by plane or nearly plane surfaces which slide upon each other to some extent, as in the articulations of the carpus in form of diarthrosis. Also called adarticularia.
Double arthrodiæ. Same as amphidarthrosis.

arthrodial (ăr-thrō-dī-ăl), a [< arthrodiæ + -al] 1 Pertaining to or characterized by an arthrodiæ. — 2 Of or pertaining to arthrosis, concerned in the jointing or articulation of parts, especially of limbs. — Arthrodial apophysis, in Crustacea, that process of an endosternite or endopleurite which enters into the formation of an articular cavity of a limb.

The endopleurite divides into three apophyses, one descending or arthrodial and two which pass nearly horizontally inward. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 209.

arthrodic (ăr-thrō-dĭk), a. Same as arthrodial.
arthrodynia (ăr-thrō-dī-nī-ă), n. [NL., < Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint, + δύνω, pain] Pain in a joint, arthralgia.

arthrodynic (ăr-thrō-dī-nĭk), a [< arthrodynia + -ic] Relating to arthrodynia, or pain in a joint, arthralgic.

Arthrogastra (ăr-thrō-gas'tră), n. [pl. [NL., < Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint, + γαστήρ, belly] A division of the class Arachnida, including the scorpions and their allies, as distinguished from spiders and mites. See cut under Scorpionida.

The Arthrogastra, or scorpions and pseudo-scorpions exhibit, in many respects, extraordinarily close resemblance to the Merostomata among the Crustacea. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 320.

Arthrogastres (ăr-thrō-gas'trĕz), n. [pl. [*NL., as *Arthrogastra] Same as Arthrogastra.

arthrography (ăr-thrō-gră-fī), n. [< Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + γραφία, < γράφω, write, describe] In anat., a description of the joints.

arthrology (ăr-thrō-lŏ-jī), n. [< Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + λογία, < λόγος, speak, see -ology] 1 The knowledge of the joints, that part of anatomy which relates to the joints. — 2 Fingerspeech for the deaf and dumb, dactylology.

arthromere (ăr-thrō-mĕr), n. [< Gr. ἀρθρον, a member, joint, + μέρος, a part] In zool., the ideal single ring of a series of which any articulate animal is composed, a zonuule, zoonite, or somite of an articulated invertebrate animal. The typical arthromere consists of a tergite, a pair of pleurites, and a sternite, or an upper piece, two lateral pieces and an under piece.

arthron (ăr-thrŏn), n. [pl. arthra (-thra) [NL., < Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint (of the body), in grammar, the article, akin to equiv. L. artus, see artus and article] In anat., a joint or an articulation of any kind.

arthroneuralgia (ăr-thrŏ-nū-ră-l'jă), n. [NL., < Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint, + ΝL. neuralgia] Neuralgia of a joint.

arthropathy (ăr-thrŏp'ă-thī), n. [< Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + πάθος, suffering] Disease of a joint.

arthrophragm (ăr-thrŏ-fră-m), n. [< Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint, + φράγμα, a fence, screen, < φράσσειν, fence in, stop up (cf. diaphragm)] An articular diaphragm, a septum or partition between certain articulations, as in the crawfish. See extract.

All four apodemes lie in the ventral half of the somite and form a single transverse series; consequently there are two nearer the middle line, which are termed the endosternites, and two further off, which are the endopleurites. The former lie at the inner, and the latter at the outer ends of the partitions or arthrophragma between the articular cavities for the basal joints of the limbs, and they spring partly from the latter and partly from the sternum and the epimeria respectively. Huxley, Crust. Fish., p. 158.

arthropleure (ăr-thrŏ-plŏ-r), n. [< NL. arthropleura, < Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint, + πλευρά, side] The pleural, lateral, or limb-bearing portion of the arthroderm of articulated animals, the portion of any arthromere between the tergite and the sternite.

arthropod (ăr-thrŏ-pŏd), n. and a [< NL. arthropus (-pŏd-), pl. arthropoda, q. v., < Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + ποὺς (-pŏd-) = E. foot] 1 n. A jointed invertebrate animal with jointed legs, one of the Arthropoda.

II. a Arthropodous; pertaining to or having the characters of the Arthropoda.

Among the Crustacea the simplest stage of the Arthropod body is seen in the Nauplius form. Gegenbaur, Comp. Anat. (trans.), p. 234.

Arthropoda (ăr-thrŏp'ŏ-dă), n. [pl. [NL., pl. of arthropus (-pŏd-): see arthropod] 1 One of two prime divisions (Anarthropoda being the other) into which a subkingdom Annulosa has been divided. It contains bilateral segmented animals with articulated legs, and approximately corresponds to the articulated animals with articulated legs of Cuvier, as contrasted with his other division (Annulæda) of Articulata, or with the Condylipoda of Latrille, or with the Gnathopoda or Arthrozoa of some other naturalists. 2 In more modern and exact usage, one of the phyla, subkingdoms, or main types of the Metazoa, containing the articulated, invertebrate, non-ehelated animals with articulated limbs, a ganglionic nervous system, oviparous reproduction, and generally separate sexes. The phylum is divided by nearly common consent into the four great classes Insecta, Myriapoda, Arachnida, and Crustacea, and contains the vast majority (about four fifths) of the animal kingdom, in numbers both of species and of individuals.

The Arthropoda with more than 900,000 species vary to such an extent that little can be said applicable to the whole group. Of all invertebrates they are the most advanced in the development of the organs peculiar to animal life, manifested in the powers of locomotion and in the instincts which are so varied and so wonderful in the insect class. Panzer, Zool. Class., p. 70.

arthropodous (ăr-thrŏp'ŏ-dus), a [< arthropod + -ous] Of or pertaining to the Arthropoda, having jointed legs (among invertebrates), condylipodous, arthrozoic. Also quathropodous.

Arthropomata (ăr-thrŏ-pŏ'mă-tă), n. [pl. [NL., < Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + πομά, pl. πομάτα, a lid] One of two orders into which the class Brachyopoda is generally divided, the other being Lophopomata, synonymous with Apygia and Articulata (b).

arthropomatous (ăr-thrŏ-pŏ'mă-tus), a [< Arthropomata + -ous] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Arthropomata.

Arthropteridæ (ăr-thrŏp'tĕr'ĭ-dĕ), n. [pl. [NL., < Arthropterus + -idæ] A family of heteropterous insects, chiefly of the Orient, Africa, and the Pacific islands, including a large number of flat wide forms, mostly of a polished black color variously marked with yellow.

arthropterous (ăr-thrŏp'tĕr-us), a [< NL. arthropterus, adj., < Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + πτερόν, a wing, fin] Having jointed rays, as a fin of a fish.

arthrosia (ăr-thrŏ'zī-ă), n. [NL. (cf. arthrosis), < Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint] Arthritis.

arthrosis (ăr-thrŏ'sis), n. [pl. arthroses (-sĕz) [NL., < Gr. ἀρθρῶν, a jointing, < ἀρθρῶν, articulated, fasten by a joint, < ἄρθρον, a joint] In anat. (a) A suture, an articulation, a joining or jointing of bones or cartilages otherwise than by ankylosis. Arthrosis is divisible into three principal categories: (1) Synarthrosis, (2) Amphiarthrosis, (3) Diarthrosis. See these words. (b) The result of articulation, a joint, an arthron, a node.

arthrospore (ăr-thrŏ-spŏr), n. [< Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + σπορ, seed] In bot., one of a number of spores united together in the form of a string of beads, formed by fission, and characteristic of various low fungi and algae.

arthrosporic (ăr-thrŏ-spŏr'ĭk), a. Same as arthrosporous.

arthrosporous (ăr-thrŏ-spŏ-rus), a [< NL. arthrosporus, see arthrosperic and -ous] Producing arthrosperes.

arthrostegma (ăr-thrŏ-stĕg'mă), n. [pl. arthrostrigmata (-mă-tă) [*NL., < Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + στεγνύμα, a support, < στεγνύω, set fast, support, prop, < √ στᾶ stand] In bot., the jointed stegma which occurs in the sporangium of many lichens.

Arthrostraca (ăr-thrŏs'tră-kă), n. [pl. [NL., < Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + στράκα, a shell] 1 In Gegenbaur's system of classification, one of two prime divisions of malacostracous crustaceans (the other being Thoracostraca), corresponding approximately to the edriophthalmous or sessile-eyed crustaceans of other authors, and divided into the three orders Amphipoda, Isopoda, and Isopoda. — 2 In Burmeister's system of classification, one of three orders of Crustacea (the other two being Aspidostraca and Thoracostraca), divided into nine lesser groups.

arthrostracous (ăr-thrŏs'tră-kus), a. Pertaining to or having the characters of the Arthrostraca.

arthrotome (ăr-thrŏ-tŏm), n. [< Gr. ἄρθρον, a joint, + τομή, cutting: see anatomy] A cartilage-knife; a strong scalpel, two-edged for a part of its cutting length, and having a roughened steel handle continuous with the blade. It is used in dissection for cutting cartilage, disarticulating joints, and other rough work.

Any thick bladed scalpel may be ground into a tolerable arthrotome. Willis and Gage, Anat. Tech., p. 63.

arthrotomy (ăr-thrŏt'ŏ-mī), n. [< Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + τομή, a cutting: see anatomy] In surg., incision into a joint.

Arthrozoa (ăr-thrŏ-zŏ'ă), n. [pl. [NL., < Gr. ἀρθρον, a joint, + ζῷον, an animal] One of six series of animals into which the Metazoa have been divided equivalent to Arthropoda together with Nematoscöleces and probably Chaetognatha.

arthrozoic (ăr-thrŏ-zŏ'ĭk), a. Relating to or having the characters of the Arthrozoa. — Arthrozoic series, a gradation of animals represented by the Nematoscöleces and Arthropoda from the lowest nematoids to the highest arthropods. Huxley.

Arthurian (ăr-thu'ri-an), a [*< Arthur, ML. form of Arthurus, representing W. *Artur] Of or pertaining to King Arthur, one of the last Celtic chiefs of Britain (the hero of a great literature of poetic fable, and whose actual existence has been questioned), or to the legends connected with him and his knights of the Round Table.

Arthurian legend is not, and never has been, to the English nation of mind what the myths which supplied the subjects of Attic tragedy were to the Greek. A. W. Ward, Long Dram. Lit., 1, 122.

artiad (ăr'ti-ăd), n. and a [< Gr. ἀρτίος, even, + -ad-] 1 n. 1 In chem., an atom whose quantivalence is expressed by an even number, as the atoms of sulphur, oxygen, etc. See perissad. — 2 In zool., an even-toed ungulate quadruped, a cloven footed ruminant animal, one of the Artiodactyla opposed to perissad. See cut under Artiodactyla.

II. a In chem., having the nature of an artiad, as, oxygen is an artiad element.

The Ar. ard-shank (Du R.), ardshank (in Aleppo—Newman), Pers. ardshank, Hind. hathi chak, are adaptations of the European forms (appar. simulating Ar. ardh, ardh, Pers. ard, ar, ground, earth, Ar. shank, thorn, Pers. shah, king, Hind. hathi, an elephant). The Cynara Scolymus, a plant of the natural order Compositæ, somewhat resembling a thistle, with large divided prickly leaves. The erect flower stem terminates in a large round head of numerous imbricated oval spiny scales which surround the flowers. The fleshy bases of the scales with the large receptacle are used as food. Artichokes were introduced into Europe early in the sixteenth century. — Jerusalem artichoke [corruption of Helianthus tuberosus sunflower artichoke] the Helianthus tuberosus a species of sunflower, native of Canada and the upper Mississippi valley. It was cultivated by the aborigines for its sweet and farinaceous tuberos roots, and was introduced at an early date into Europe, where it is raised in considerable quantities as an article of food. The plant was long believed to be a native of Brazil and it is only recently that its true origin has been ascertained.

10 The number 10, or any number ending in a cipher. — 11 In gram., a word used attributively to limit the application of a noun to one individual or set of individuals, and also to indicate whether the noun used signifies indefinitely one or any one of the class which it names, or definitely a specific object of thought. The two articles are regarded as a distinct part of speech. They are in English an (before consonant sounds) and the. In was originally the same word as one and in meaning is in unemphatic any. It singles out an individual as an example of a class any other member of the class being capable of serving as example equally well. A or an is accordingly called the indefinite article. The was originally a demonstrative pronoun, and in meaning is in unemphatic this or that. It points out a particular individual or set of individuals, and is consequently known as the definite article. Articles may therefore be regarded as a specialized and segregated class of pronouns. Some languages as Latin have no articles others as Hebrew and Greek have the definite article only. The indefinite article is always of later formation than the definite. [The name article is a translation of the word appos joint, which was applied by the Greek grammarians to the an article of that language (the definite) on account of its frequent use after the manner of a relative to join an adjective to a noun as, ἀντὶ τοῦ ἀγαθοῦ, literally man the good, for (the) man who (is) good, that is, the good man.] — Articles of association, or articles of incorporation, the certificate filed, in conformity with a general law, by persons who desire to become a corporation, and setting forth the rules and conditions upon which the association or corporation is founded. — Articles of Confederation. See Confederation. — Articles of faith, the main or essential points of religious belief, specifically, an authoritative and binding statement of such points as held by a particular church or denomination, a doctrinal creed. — Articles of impeachment, the accusations in writing which form the basis of an impeachment trial. They take the place of the indictment in ordinary criminal, and of the denuntiatio or complaint in civil, actions. — Articles of Perth, five articles agreed upon at a General Assembly of the Church of Scotland convened by James VI in 1618, on joining certain episcopal observances, such as the observance of feast days, kneeling at the Lord's supper, etc. They were ratified by the Scotch Parliament in 1621 and became a subject of bitter controversy between the king and the people. — Articles of the peace, an obligation to keep the peace for a certain time, under a penalty, and with or without sanctions, imposed upon an individual against whom some one has exhibited a complaint that there is just cause to fear that the party complained of will burn the complainant's house or do him some bodily harm, or procure a third person to do it. — Articles of Schmalkald, articles of Protestant faith drawn up by Luther, and submitted to a meeting of electors, princes, and states at Schmalkald (or Schmalkalden), Germany, in 1547, designed to show how far the Protestants were willing to go in order to avoid a rupture with Rome. — Articles of war, a code of regulations for the government and discipline of the army and navy. In Great Britain they are embodied in the Mutiny Act, which is passed every year. The articles of war of the United States are 128 in number, anything relating to the army not comprehended therein is published in general orders or in established regulations, issued from time to time by the War Department, copies of which are furnished and read to the troops. — City article. See city. — In the article of, in the matter of, as regards.

Lords of the Articles. See lord. — Marriage articles. See marriage. — Memorandum articles. See memorandum. — The Five Articles and the Five Points, statements of the distinctive doctrines of the Arminians and Calvinists respectively, the former promulgated in 1610 in opposition to the restrictive principles of the latter, which were sustained by the Synod of Dort in 1619, and are the following: particular predestination, limited atonement, natural inability, irresistible grace, and the perseverance of saints. The discussion of these differences at that time is sometimes called the great quarrel of the articles. — The Lambeth Articles, nine articles drawn up in 1595 at Lambeth England, intended to embody the Calvinistic doctrine respecting predestination, justification, etc. They were never approved by the church in any regular synod, and therefore possess no ecclesiastical authority. — The Six Articles, sometimes called the "whip with six strings," articles imposed by a statute (often called the Bloody Statute) passed in 1539, in the reign of Henry VIII. They decreed the acknowledgment of transubstantiation, the sufficiency of communion in one kind, the obligation of vows of chastity, the propriety of private masses, celibacy of the clergy and auricular confession. Acceptance of these six doctrines was made obligatory on all persons under the severest penalties. The act, however, was relaxed in 1544, and repealed by the Parliament of 1549. — The Thirty-nine Articles, a statement of the particular points of doctrine, thirty nine in number, maintained by the Church of England first framed by an ecclesiastical commission in forty two articles (1562), and revised and promulgated in thirty nine articles by a convocation held in London in 1562-63. With some alterations they were adopted by the Church of Ireland in 1635, and by the Scottish Episcopal Church in 1804 and with certain modifications, by the Protestant Episcopal Church of the United States in 1801. — The Twenty-five Articles, the doctrinal basis of the Methodist Episcopal Church substantially the thirty nine articles of the church of England, with the omission of the 14th, 18th, 19th, 17th, 18th, 20th, 21st, 24th, 29th, 33d, 34th, and 37th. They were originally framed by John Wesley and, with some modification, were adopted, substantially as now held in 1784.

(a) In Cuvier's system of classification, the third prime division of the animal kingdom, including all segmented invertebrates in which the body is made up of a series of rings (metameres), is endowed with a ganglionated nervous system, and possesses distinct respiratory organs. It is divided into five classes, Crustacea, Arachnida, Insecta, Myriapoda, and Annelida. This division corresponds to the Annulosa of some zoologists, but neither of these terms is now recognized by leading naturalists. Cuvier's first four classes of Articulata are now made the phylum Arthropoda, while his Annelida are referred to another phylum, Vermes. (b) One of two orders of Brachyopoda, some times styled the Arthropomata (which see), the other order being called Inarticulata. It corresponds to the arthropomatus Brachyopoda, containing those brachiopods in which the shell is hinged, the mantle lobes are not entirely free, and the intestine is cecal. (c) One of two divisions of cyclostomatous polyzoans, containing the families Sakcomaridae and Cellulariidae opposed to Inarticulata. (d) One of two divisions of cyclostomatous polyzoans, represented by the family Crasidea. Also called Radicata. (e) One of two divisions of crinoids, the other being Tesselata.

articulate (ar'tik'ū-lāt), a and n [< L articulatus, jointed, distinct (applied particularly to utterance), pp of articulare see articulate, v] I. a 1 Jointed, segmented, articulated as, an articulate limb, an articulate animal. — 2 Specifically, having the character of the Articulata. — 3 Jointed by syllabic division, divided into distinct successive parts, like joints, by the alternation of opener and closer sounds, or the intervention of consonantal utterances (sometimes also of pause or hiatus) between vowel sounds said of human speech-utterance, as distinguished from other sounds made by human organs, and from the sounds made by the lower animals. The terms articulate, articulation, etc., as applied to human utterance, are not seldom misunderstood and wrongly used as if the "jointing" intended were that of the physical organs of utterance, a narrowing or closing of the organs at some point or points. Such action, however, belongs to all utterance, articulate or inarticulate, whether of man or of the other animals. See consonant, syllable, vowel.

=Syn Artifice, Maneuver, Stratagem Web Trick Ruse, Prison, device, contrivance, cunning, craft, deception, cheat, fraud, guile, imposition, dodge, subterfuge, double dealing. These words generally imply a careful endeavor to compass an end by deceiving others not necessarily, however, with evil intent. They all imply management and address. An artifice is prepared with art or care. It is craftily devised. Maneuver suggests something more elaborate or intricate, a carefully contrived movement or course of action for a definite purpose. It is the quiet or secret marshaling of one's intellectual or other resources to carry a point. Stratagem is like maneuver, a figurative term drawn from war, it is upon a larger scale what ruse is upon a smaller, a device to deceive one who is the object of an imagined warfare, so that we may catch him at a disadvantage and discomfit him, or more generally, a carefully prepared plan to carry one's point with another—to capture it or him so to speak. A ruse may be peculiarly cunning or insinuating. Trick is the lowest and most dishonorable of these words. It may be a low or underhand act in violation of honor or propriety for the purpose of cheating, or something as bad. A ruse is a deception of some elaborate nature intended to cover one's intentions, help one to escape from a predicament, etc., it is a plausible way of blinding about what we desire to happen, without apparent interference on our part. Finesse is subtlety in action. It is a more delicate sort of artifice. See artful, reason and fraud

A favorite artifice [with Venetian beggars] is to approach charity with a slice of polenta in one hand and, with the other extended, implore a soldier to buy cheese to eat with the polenta. Houdie Venetian Life, xx

3 In modern use, properly, all firearms discharged from carriages, in contradistinction to small arms, which are discharged from the hand, cannon, ordnance (guns, howitzers and mortars are the three kinds of artillery employed in the land service of the United States. They are classified as light and heavy artillery, according to their character, and as field, sea, and sea coast artillery, according to their principal use. See phrases below

Hence—4 The particular troops employed in the service of such firearms—5 The science which treats of the use and management of ordnance. Artillery fire See fire—Field-artillery Same as light artillery but often used specifically for foot artillery, the heaviest class of field artillery—Flying artillery, artillery designed for very rapid evolutions, the gunners being either all mounted or accustomed to ride up on the ammunition chests when the pieces are to be dragged from one part of the field to another—Foot-artillery, field artillery which is served by artillerymen on foot, as distinguished from horse artillery. It is used in connection with infantry—Heavy artillery, all artillery not formed into batteries or equipped for field evolutions, it is divided into gun and sea coast artillery—Horse-artillery, light field or machine guns of which the cannoneers in manuevering, or marching are mounted on horseback. It generally accompanies cavalry—Light artillery, artillery for service in the field. It is organized into batteries and is armed with guns of different calibers according to its special function, and with machine guns, and includes flying artillery, foot or field artillery, horse artillery, and mountain artillery. Also called feld artillery—Mountain-artillery, light artillery of small caliber used in mountain warfare and mounted either on light carriages or on pack animals for transportation—Park of artillery See park—Royal regiment of artillery, a collective name for the whole of the artillery belonging to the British army. This force is divided into a number of brigades which in respect of size would correspond with the regiments into which the other forces are divided—Sea-coast artillery, artillery consisting of guns of the heaviest caliber used for the armament of permanent works chiefly on the sea coast. Their carriages do not subvert the purpose of transportation. Four distinct systems of mounting are used with such artillery namely, the swivel, the cannon, the barbette, and the mortar carriage—Siege-artillery, artillery used in attacking fortified places, and, when it accompanies armies in their operations in war, mounted on carriages for transportation, when employed in the defense of field-works it is sometimes called garrison-artillery—Train of artillery, a number of pieces of ordnance, mounted on carriages, with all their furniture, and ready for marching artillery-carriage (ar-til'-e-ri-kar'-aj), n See gun-carriage

artillery-level (ar-til'-e-ri-lev'-el), n An instrument for indicating the angle of elevation which it is desired to give to a piece of artillery in aiming. It is made to stand on the piece, and marks, by means of a pendulous pointer, the angle made by the axis of the piece with the horizon artilleryman (ar-til'-e-ri-man), n, pl artillerymen (-men) [< artillery + man] One who serves a piece of artillery or cannon; a soldier in the artillery corps artillery-plant (ar-til'-e-ri-plant), n A name given to some cultivated species of Pilea, as P. scrypholoba and P. muscosa, natives of tropical America. The name has allusion to the forcible discharge of the pollen from the anthers by the sudden straightening of the elastic filaments artimorantico (ar-ti-mor'-an-tē'-kō), n Alloy imitating old gold, composed of tin, bismuth, sulphur, and copper artiodactyl, artiodactyle (ar-ti'-ō-dak'-tīl), a and n [< NL artiodactylus, < Gr ἀρτιος, even in number, complete, perfect, exact (< ἀπρί, just, exactly, just now, < √ ap, join, fit, reduplicate ἀρᾶσθαι see art, arm, etc.), + δακτύλος, a finger, toe see dactyl] 1 a Of or pertaining to the Artiodactyla, cloven-footed, even-toed. Also artiodactylous

II n One of the Artiodactyla Artiodactyla (ar-ti'-ō-dak'-tī-lī), n pl [NL, neut pl of artiodactylus see artiodactyl] An order or a suborder of ungulate or hoofed mammals which are cloven-footed or even-toed and have hoofs in pairs (either two or four), as all ruminants (Bovidae, Cervidae, etc.) and hog-like ungulates (Hippopotamidae, Suidae, etc.) opposed to odd-toed ungulates or Perissodactyla, as the horse, rhinoceros, tapir, etc. The character indicated in the name is only one expression of a wide difference which exists between all the living ungulates of the two series named, though various extinct forms go far toward bridging over the gap between them. The functional digits of the Artiodactyla are the third and fourth of the typical pentadactyl foot, forming the pair of large true hoofs, in addition to which there may be present a pair (second and fifth) of smaller hoofed digits, the false hoofs. The metacarpals and metatarsals are correspondingly modified. In typical cases by the reduction of the lateral ones (second and fifth) and the ankylosis of the enlarged third and fourth into a stout single cannon bone.

B, Artiodactyl 1 cet (see Artiodactyl 1 cet)
C, Artiodactyl 1 cet (see Artiodactyl 1 cet)
The diagrams illustrate the structure of the hoof and digits of Artiodactyl 1 cet. Diagram A shows a hoof with four digits, with the third and fourth being the main hoofs. Diagram B shows a hoof with three digits, with the third and fourth being the main hoofs. Diagram C shows a hoof with two digits, with the third and fourth being the main hoofs.

There are also modifications of the carpal and tarsal bones. The femur has a third trochanter. The distal humerus is tuberculate, in general 19 dorsal 12-13, lumbar 7-8. The premaxillary bone has more or less flattened toward the ends and in the ruminants has no teeth. The stomach is more or less subdivided and complex. This group includes all the ungulate (not the solidungulate, however) animals domesticated from time immemorial as the ruminants and the pigs. All the wild ruminants, as the deer and antelope and the peccaries and hippopotamuses

The high shod plowman, should he quit the land, Artless of stars, and of the moving sand
Dryden, tr of Persius, Satires, v 140

In early times very little that resembles modern joinery was known, every part was rude, and joined in the most artless manner. Sneye Brit, IV 485.

2. Without knowledge of art; ignorant of the fine arts [Rare.]

And as for Mr. Ruskin's world of art being a place where he may take life easily, woe to the luckless mortal who enters it with any such disposition. The poor wanderer soon begins to look back with infinite longing to the lost paradise of the artless.

H. James, Jr., Portraits of Places, p. 68

3. Showing no artistic skill, inartistic; rude [Rare.]

Had it been a practice of the Saxons to set up these assemblages of artless and massy pillars, more specimens would have remained. T. Norton, Hist. of Kildington

4. Free from guile, craft, or stratagem; simple, sincere, unaffected, undesigning, unsophisticated as, an artless mind

The little artless Rosey warbled on her pretty ditties. Thackeray, The Newcomes, II 58

artocarpad (är-tö-kär'pad), n A member of the tribe Artocarpeae Lindley

Artocarpeae (är-tö-kär'pā-ē), n pl [NL, < Artocarpus, q. v.] A tribe of trees or shrubs under the natural order Urticaceae, but by some botanists retained as a distinct order, characterized generally by a milky juice, small unisexual flowers numerous upon a fleshy receptacle, erect anthers, and pendulous ovules. There are about 25 genera, including the fig (Ficus) the cow tree (Bromelia) the upas (Antiaris), the India rubber tree of Central America (Castilla), and the breadfruit (Artocarpus). The tribe is mostly tropical, and is represented in the United States only by a few species of Ficus in southern Florida.

artocarpous, artocarpeous (är-tö-kär'pus, -pē-us), a [NL Artocarpus + -ous, -eous, q. v.] Relating to the Artocarpeae, or to the breadfruit-tree Artocarpus (är-tö-kär'pus), n [NL, < Gr ἀρτοκάρπος, bread (of unknown origin), + καρπός, fruit] A genus of tropical trees, natural order Urticaceae, tribe Artocarpeae. Many species are known, some of which in the forests of Bengal and Malabar yield valuable timber, called artocarpus wood. The most important species is A. incana, the breadfruit tree of the South Sea Islands. See breadfruit tree. The Jack tree or Jack tree, A. integrifolia, is the breadfruit of tropical Asia, where it is extensively used for food. See jackfruit.

artolateri, n [Gr ἀρτοκάρπος, bread, + -λατρίαι, worship. See artolatry] A worshiper of bread

Arvicolinae (är-vik'ō-lī-nē), n pl [NL, < Arvicola + -ina] One of several subfamilies into which the family Muridae is divided. It contains those murine rodents which (except Reptomys) have the following characters: perennially growing, prismatic, rootless molars, with flat crowns and serrate periphery; incisors usually broader transversely than in the opposite direction; the root of the under incisor sometimes causing a protuberance on the inner side of the mandibular ramus between the condyloid process and the strong hamule angle of the mandible which latter attains the level of the molar crowns; the zygomatic arch wide, not dipping to the level of the arch of the palate, and the nasal bones not produced beyond the premaxillaries; and the dental formula of 16 teeth there being 1 incisor and 3 molars on each side of each jaw without any canines or premolars. The Arvicolinae are specially characteristic of the northern hemisphere and are very abundant in high latitudes. They include all kinds of voles or field mice properly so called, the water rat of Europe, the meadow mice of America, the lemmings, the muskrat, etc. The leading genera are Reptomys (Cous.), Arvicola (Jacquard) with its several subdivisions, Synaptomys (Baird), Microtus (Pallas), Ctenodactylus (Wagner), and Fiber (Cuvier). The species are very numerous

II. n. 1. A member of the eastern or Asiatic division of the Indo-European family, occupying the territories between Mesopotamia and the Bay of Bengal, in the two subdivisions of Persia, or Iran, and India. [This is the older more scientific and still widely current use of the word. More recent but increasingly popular is the second use.] 2. An Indo-European or Indo-German or Ja-phetic, a member of that section of the human race which includes the Hindus and Iranians (Persians) as its eastern or Asiatic division, and the Greeks, Italians, Celts, Slavonians, and Germans or Teutons as its western or European division. The languages of all these branches or groups of people are akin; that is to say, they are descendants of one origin; once spoken in a limited locality by a single community, but where or when it is impossible to say.

Many words still live in India and England that have witnessed the first separation of the northern and southern Aryans, and these are witnesses not to be shaken by any cross examination. The terms for God, for house, for father, mother, son, daughter, for dog and cow, for heart and tears, for axe and tree, identical in all the Indo-European idioms, are like the watchwords of soldiers. We challenge the seeming stranger, and whether he answers with the lips of a Greek, a German, or an Indian, we recognize him as one of ourselves. There was a time when the ancestors of the Celts, the Germans, the Slavonians, the Greeks and Italians, the Persians and Hindus were living together beneath the same roof, separate from the ancestors of the Semitic and Hamitic races.

as (az), adv., conj., and pron. [< ME as, ase, als, also, also, also, also, al so, al swa, < AS alsuā, alswā, al swā (= OS alsu = OFries as, ase, ast, als, alsa, = D als = OHG alsō, MHG alsō, also, G also, als), lit. 'all so,' wholly so, quite so, just so, being the demonstrative adv. so, qualified by the intensive adv. all. As a demonstrative, the word retains its full form (see also), as a relative or correlative, the word, through weakening of force and accent, has been reduced to as. It is thus historically so with an absorbed intensive, whose force has disappeared, and it has all the relational uses of so, the difference being only idiomatrical. The peculiar form and uses of as have arisen out of the correlation so (AS swā swā, or, without separation, swā swā), in which both terms were orig. demonstrative. The second term passed into the relative use, and the first, remaining demonstrative, was strengthened by the adv. all (AS al swā . . . swā). The second term, as a relative, became weak in accent, and, after assuming the prefix all in conformity to the first, was gradually reduced, through also, als, als, ase, to as, to which, in turn, the first term in many constructions conformed. The resulting correlations so so, as as, so, as, through involution of uses, transposition of clauses, and ellipsis of one or the other term, extending often to the whole clause, present in mod. E. a complication of constructions which cannot be fully exhibited except at great length, and in connection with the earlier uses. They are also involved with the kindred correlations such . . . as (such being historically so, with an absorbed relational suffix) and same as, in which the relative conj. as varies with that, and leads to the use of as as a simple relative pronoun.] I. adv. (demonstrative or antecedent) The antecedent in the correlation as . . . so, or as as. In that degree, to that extent, so far. The correlation as . . . so is obsolete, as so is in exactly common use being, besides like, the regular formula of comparison to express likeness or equality. as black as jet, as cold as ice, as wise as Solomon, etc., the verb in the relative clause, when the same as in the principal clause, being usually omitted. as, it is as cold as ice (sc. is), come as soon as you can (sc. come).

He was al so [var. also, als, as] freche as is the moneth of Mai.

II. conj. (conjunction or relative adv.) 1. The conjunction in the correlations as . . . as, so . . . as, such . . . as, same as, etc., expressing quantity, degree, proportion, manner, etc. The relative uses are exhibited in I (where see examples). Through ellipsis of the antecedent, it enters into many peculiar idiomatic phrases.

No th not so deep as a well, nor so wide as a church door, but th enough, *tw*ill serve.

Shak., R. and J., iii. 1

His resolutions were as fained as his vows were frus-trated.

But th it be.

Shak., Hamlet, v. 2

I must confess I lov'd her, as who would not?

Fletcher, Loyal Subject, v. 7

In subordinate clauses involving a supposition, as is conditional, being equivalent to as if as though, which are the ordinary forms. This use is now rare or only poetical except in the independent phrase as it were (see phrases below).

It lifted up its head, and did address
Itself to motion, like as it would speak.

Shak., Hamlet, i. 2

And all at once their breath drew in,
As they were drinking all.

Coleridge, Ancient Mariner, l. 165

The young lambs bound

Wordsworth, Intimations of Immortality

The clause introduced by as may be reduced by ellipsis of its verb and other elements to one or two important words, leaving as as a quasi-connective. (a) Between an adverb or adverbial phrase in the principal clause and an adverb or adverbial phrase constituting the subordinate clause.

It suffices me to say that men here, as elsewhere, are indisposed to innovation.

Emerson, Lit. Ethics

(b) Between the principal verb or its subject and the subordinate subject or object, which becomes equivalent to a predicate appositive or facilitative object after the principal verb, as meaning 'after the manner of,' 'the same as,' 'like,' 'in the character or capacity of,' etc. as, the audience rose as one man, all these things were as nothing to him, he has been nominated as a candidate. Hence in constructions where the appositive clause depends directly upon the noun as, his career as a soldier was brilliant, his reputation as a scholar stands high, and so in naming phases of a general subject as, Washington as a general, man as a thinker. The construction as a quasi predicate appositive, or factitive object after a principal verb is usual after verbs of seeming or regarding.

Evil was embraced for good, wickedness honour'd and esteem'd as virtue. Milton, Hist. Eng., iii

That law which concerneth men as men. Hooker, Eccles. Pol.

This gentleman was known to his contemporaries as a man of fortune, and as the author of two successful plays. Macaulay

Our age is bewail'd as the age of Introversion. Emerson, Amer. Scholar

The subordinate clause introduced by as is often not dependent grammatically upon the principal verb, but serves to restrict or determine the scope of the statement as a whole. Such clauses are parenthetical, and usually elliptical, some of them as as usual and as a rule, having almost the idiomatic unity of an adverbial phrase.

The streets were narrow, as is usual in Moorish and Arab cities. Irving, Granada, p. 2

In certain emphatic formulas, as ('even as') introduces a solemn attestation ('as truly or surely as') or adjuration ('in a manner befitting the fact that'), approaching a causal sense, 'since, because' (see 2, below).

But truly as the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, there is but a step between me and death. 1 Sam. xv. 3

Now, as you are a Roman, tell me true. Shak., J. C. iv. 3

As ever thou lov'st valour, or what's a name To punish baseness, shew it! Beau. and Fl., Knight of Malta, iv. 4

2. Of reason Since, because, inasmuch as

He who would persuade us of his sorrow for the sins of other men, as they are sins, not as they are sins against himself, must give us first some testimony of a sorrow for his own sins. Milton, Eikonoklastes, viii

As the wind was favorable, I had an opportunity of enjoying this amazing scene. Bp. Berkeley

3. Of time When, while, during the time that

And whistled as he went for want of thought. Dryden, Cymon and Iphigenia, l. 85

As day broke, the scene of slaughter unfolded its horrors. Irving, Granada, p. 97

4. Of purpose or result The consequent in the correlations so as, such as. To such a degree that, in such a manner that followed by an infinitive or, formerly, by a finite verb (but in the latter construction that has taken the place of as)

So many examples as filled xv. books. Asham, The Scholemaster, p. 157

The relations are so uncertain as they require a great deal of examination. Bacon

Indeed the prospect of affairs here is so strange and melancholy as would make any one desirous of withdrawing from the country at any rate. Hume

With a depth so great as to make it a day's journey from the sea to the van, and a front so narrow as to consist of one gun and one horseman. Ainslie, China, III. ix

5. Of mere continuation, introducing a clause in explanation or amplification of a word or statement in the principal clause, especially in giving examples For example, for instance, to wit, thus

Winter birds, as woodcocks and fieldfares. Bacon

A simple idea is one idea as sweet, bitter. Locke

6. In dependent clauses That formerly as was often attached, like that to the adverbs then, where, when, etc. to make them distinctly relative. These forms are now obsolete, except whereas which remains in a deflected sense. See whereas. From this interchange with that followed the use of as for that, in introducing an object clause after say, know, think, etc., varying with as that and as how only in dialectal use. as, I don't know as I do, and I don't know as I do, the sense varying with the accent. [Colloq., New Eng.]

'Dunnow z I know the nearest your true Yankee ever comes to acknowledging ignorance. Lowell, introd. to Biglow Papers, 2d ser.

7. After comparatives Than [Now only prov. Eng., et G. als, the regular construction after comparatives]

How may the herb be more contrite and meek as when of very contrivance we aske mercy and forgiveness of almighty god? Bp. Fisher, l. 210

Darkness itself is no more opposite to light as their actions were diametrical to their words. Hemill, Early of Beasts, p. 48

I rather like him as otherwise. Scott, St. Rounan's Well

8. Before certain adverbs and adverbial phrases, including prepositional phrases Even, just restricting the application to a particular point as, as now, as then, as yet, as here, as there, etc. [Now only dialectal, except as yet. See phrases below]

There is no Christian duty that is not to be assoned and set off with cheerfulness—which in a thousand outward and intermitting crosses may yet be done well, as in this vale of tears. Milton

Before punishment he was to be heard as to morrow. Warburton

Before prepositional phrases as becomes attached in thought to the preposition, making practically a new prepositional unit. See as as concerning, as for, etc., below. As as concerning, as touching, more commonly as for, as to, so far as it concerns, as regards as respects. In regard to in respect to introducing a particular point or subject of thought.

And in regard of causes now in hand, Which I have open'd to his grace at large. Shak., Hen. V. 1. 1

So A Jack! Jack! what think you of blooming love breathing seventeen? Shak., Hen. V. 1. 1

As to that, sir, I am quite indifferent. If I can please you in the matter, tis all I desire. Shak., Hen. V. 1. 1

As if, as though, as it would be if or supposing that

It seemed to the affrighted inhabitants as if the fiends of the air had come upon the wings of the wind, and possessed themselves of tower and turret. Irving, Granada, p. 21

Blinded alike from sunshine and from rain, As though a rose should shut and be a bud again. Kratts, Eve of St. Agnes

As it were, as if it were so. In some sort, so to speak a parenthetical clause indicating that a statement or comparison is admitted to be inexact, though substantially correct for the purpose intended.

Brutus, that expelled the kings out of Rome, was for the time set to be, as it were, a king himself till matters were set in order as in a free commonwealth. Milton, Political Episcopacy

As much, what amounts to the same thing, the same

But if you laugh at my rude carriage In peace, I'll do as much for you in war. Shak., J. C. iv. 3

As well (as), just as much (as) equally (with) in addition (to), besides as that is true but it is true of the other as well. This is the case with manufacturing as well as with agricultural interests.

Tarentine form of Gr. as, one, but this derivation is very doubtful. See ace] 1. In Latin, an integer, a whole or single thing, especially, a unit divided into twelve parts. Thus, the jugerum was called an as. Hence—2 As a unit of weight, 12 ounces (1 uncia, twelfth), the libra or pound, equal to 325.8 grams, or 5,023 grains—3 A copper coin, the unit of the early monetary system of Rome. It was first coined in the fourth (according to Mommsen, the fifth) century B. C. and was at first nominally of the weight of a libra or pound that is 12 ounces. It was gradually reduced in weight, about 200 B. C. weighing 4 ounces and about 250 B. C. 2 ounces. In 80 B. C., after having fallen to half an ounce it ceased to be issued. The smaller copper coins forming the divisions of the as were named sestus (half of the as) triens (third) quadrans (fourth), sestans (sixth), and quintus (fifth). The constant obverse type of the as has the double head of Janus, the reverse a prow. Its subdivisions bore various devices. Coins struck on the same system (called the libral system) were issued in other parts of Italy from the fourth century B. C. See as grave, under as.

2. A supposed kind of flax alleged to be incombustible. [An erroneous notion of the mineral. See 3.] 3. A fibrous variety of amphibole or hornblende, composed of separable filaments, with a silky luster, also, in popular use, a similar variety of serpentine called chrysotile. Its fibers are sometimes delicate, flexible and elastic, sometimes stiff and brittle, and when reduced to a powder are soft to the touch. Its colors are various shades of white, gray or green, passing into brown red or black. It is incombustible, and is therefore used for making lamp wicks, paper, firemen's clothing, building materials, twine and rope for packing steam joints and pistons. It is also prepared as a cement for protecting heated surfaces, roofs and floors and for various fireproofing purposes. It is mined in Canada, Vermont, Virginia, South Carolina and in Staten Island, New York. Some varieties are compact and take a fine polish; others are loose like flax or silky wool. Liquidiform asbestos or mountain wool is a variety presenting an irregular filamentous structure like wool. Other varieties of hornblende asbestos are rock cork, mountain leather, fossil paper and fossil flax. A fine variety is called amiantus (which see). Blue asbestos, the mineral crocidolite (which see).

asbestos-stove (as-bes'tos-stöv), n A gas-stove with asbestos spread over the burners, so as to form an incandescent radiator.

asbestous (as-bes'tus), a [< asbestos + -ous] Same as asbestic.

asbestus, n See asbestos.

asbolan, asbolane (as'bō-lan, -lan), n [< Gr ασβολαν, also ασβολη, soot (< φωλος, soot, smoke), + -an] Earthy cobalt, was containing oxid of cobalt. It is used in the manufacture of small. Also called asbolite.

asbolin, asboline (as'bō-lin), n [As asbol-an + -ine] An oil-like, nitrogenous matter, acid and bitter, obtained from the soot of wood.

asbolite (as'bō-lit), n [As asbol-an + -ite] Same as asbolan.

Ascalabota (as-ka-lā'bō'ta), n pl [NL, see Ascalabotes] One of the major groups of the Lacertidae, consisting of the geckos alone. See Gecco and Gecconidae. Also called Nyctisauria.

Ascalabotes (as-ka-lā'bō'tēz), n [NL, < Gr ασκαλαβωτης, the spotted lizard, prob. Lacerta gecko] A genus of nyctisaurian lizards, of the family Gecconidae or Gecconidae. A fascicularis is sometimes known by the name taxinotula. The genus was originally, as used by Cuvier, coextensive with the family, or with the modern superfamily Ascalabota.

Ascalaphidae (as-ka-lā'fī-dē), n pl [NL, < Ascalaphus + -idae] A family of planipennine neuropterous insects, related to the ant-lions (Myrmeleontidae), and characterized by long clavate antennae and a comparatively short body. It corresponds to the genus Ascalaphus of Fabricius.

Ascalaphus (as-ka-lā'fūs), n [NL, < Gr ασκαλαφος, an unknown bird, supposed to be a kind of owl] 1. The typical genus of the family Ascalaphidae.—2. [< L] The specific name of a horned owl, Bubo ascalaphus, of Europe and Africa.

Ascalopax (as-ka-lō'paks), n [NL, Cf Gr ασκαλωπας (sic), a bird, supposed to be the same as σκαλωπας see Scalopax] In ornith. (a) An old form of Scalopax. (b) A synonym of Gallinago.

ascanti, adv See askant.

ascarid (as'ka-rīd), n One of the ascaridae. Ascaridae (as-ka-rī-dē), n pl [NL, < Ascaris + -idae] A family of worms, of the order Nematoda and class Nemathelmintha, containing several genera of round-worms or thread-worms, which are intestinal parasites of man and other animals. They have a cylindrical elastic body tapering toward each end, and a trilobed head. The leading genera are Ascaris and Oxyuris. See cut under Oxyuris.

Ascaris (as'ka-rīs), n [NL, < Gr ασκαρις, a worm in the intestines] 1. A genus of round-worms, typical of the family Ascaridae, infesting the small intestines. The best-known species, A. lumbricoides, is so called from its resemblance to an earth worm in size, shape, and general appearance. It has a cylindrical body with ends of equal size, a somewhat conical head with trilobate terminal mouth and a filiform penis. The genital pore of the female is in the anterior part of the body. The female attains a length of from 12 to 14 inches; the male is less than half as long. 2. [< L, pl ascarides (as-ka-rī-dēz)] A thread-worm or pinworm of the rectum, formerly placed in this genus, now referred to a different genus, Oxyuris (which see).

ascend (a-sen'd), v [< ME ascenden, ascenden, < L ascendere, ascenderet, go up, climb up to, < ad, to, + scandere, climb, see scan, and cf descend, transcend] 1. intrans 1. To move upward, mount, go up, rise, whether in air or water, or upon a material object.

In our proper motion we ascend
Up to our native seat—descent and fall
To us is adviced. Milton, P. L., li 75

2. To rise, in a figurative sense, proceed from an inferior to a superior degree, from mean to noble objects, from particulars to generals, etc.

By these steps we shall ascend to more just ideas of the glory of Jesus Christ. Watts, Improvement of Mind.
Is some time questioned whether morals have not declined as the arts have ascended. Emerson, Works and Days.

3. To slope upward.—4. To go backward in the order of time, proceed from modern to ancient times, as, our inquiries ascend to the remotest antiquity.—5. To rise, as a star, appear above the horizon.

Higher yet that star ascends.

See J. Bowring, Watchman. Tell us of the Night.

6. In music, to rise in pitch, pass from any tone to one more acute. = syn To mount, climb.

II trans 1. To go or move upward upon, climb, as to ascend a hill or ladder, to ascend a tree.

We returned to the great tower and ascended the steep flight of steps which led to its door of entrance.

R. Curzon, Monast in the Levant p 77.

2. To move upward along, go toward the source of, as, to ascend a river. = syn To mount, climb, scale.

ascendable (a-sen'da-bl), a [< ascend + -able] Capable of being ascended. Also written ascendible.

ascendance, ascendency (a-sen'dans, -dens), n Same as ascendancy. [Rare.]

I had had too much ascendancy on the mind.

Goldman, Joseph Andrews ix.

ascendency, ascendancy (a-sen'dan-si, -den-si), n [< ascendant, -ant, + -ancy, -ency] The state of being in the ascendant, governing or controlling influence, domination.

The great Latin war, the war in which the first Decimus gave himself for Rome, marks the last struggle of Rome's immediate kinsfolk against her ascendancy.

E. A. Freeman, Amer. Lects., p 317.

ascendant, ascendent (a-sen'dant, -dant), a and n. [< ME ascendent, ascendent, n. (the form ascendant being later, after F. ascendant), < L. ascendens (-t), ppr of ascendere, go up, rise, ascend. see ascend] 1. a 1. Proceeding upward; rising, mounting.—2. Superior; predominant, surpassing, as, "an ascendant spirit over him," South—3. In astrology, rising over the horizon, or nearly so.

The constellation of Pegasus is about that time ascendant. Sir T. Browne, Vulgar Err.

4. In bot, same as ascending.—5. In her, rising or issuing upward (the reverse of assendant) as, rays of the sun ascendant from the bottom of the shield, from a fesse, etc.

II n 1. In astrology, the point of the ecliptic or the sign of the zodiac that is situated on the eastern horizon at any particular moment, as at the moment of birth or of the propounding of any question, the horoscope. The house of the ascendant includes that part of the zodiac which extends from 5 above the horizon to 25 below it. The lord of the ascendant is the planet that rules the ascendant. This planet is generally the significator of the querent, and the decision of the question depends upon its aspects. Hence, to be in the ascendant signifies to have commanding power or influence, to occupy a ruling position, and lord of the ascendant, one who has possession of such power or influence, as, to rule, for a while, lord of the ascendant.

The ascendant soothly, as well in alle nativite, as in questions and elections of tymes, is a thing which thilke Astrologers greatly obsevern, whil for the meynth convenient shi that I speke of the ascendant to make of it special declaration. The ascendant soothly, to take it at the largest, is thilke degree that ascendith at any of thilke forside tymes upon the east Orizonte, and there fore, gif that any planet ascende at that same tyme in thilke forside degre of his longitud, Men seyn thilke planet is in horoscople. Chaucer.

Science that were then in their highest ascendant. Sir W. Temple.

Mailborough had not, when Popery was in the ascendant, crossed himself, shriven himself, done penance, taken the communion in one kind, and, as soon as a turn of fortune came, apostatized back again.

Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xx.

2. Superiority or commanding influence, predominance, especially in the phrase to gain the ascendant over one.

What star I know not, but some star, I find,
Has given thee an ascendant over my mind.

Druiden, in of Parnassus, Satires, v 66.

She had art enough to gain an entire ascendant over the king. Goldsmith, Voltaire.

The secular authority long unduly depressed, regained the ascendant with startling rapidity.

Macaulay, Von Ranke.

3. An ancestor, or one who precedes in genealogy or degrees of kindred, opposed to descendant.

The succession of ascendants of the deceased, of his male paternal ancestors, if any survived him. Mayne, Early Law and Custom, p 111.

4. In arch, one of the two sides or vertical members of the chambrane of a door or window.

ascender (a-sen'dér), n 1. One who ascends.

—2. An ascending letter. See ascending.

ascending (a-sen'ding), a 1. Proceeding from a lower position to a higher, rising; moving upward, figuratively, proceeding from the less to the greater, proceeding from a later to an earlier time, rising from grave to acute.—2. In bot, growing upward, as the stem of a plant, which is called the ascending axis (commonly restricted to the axis of growing up obliquely or in a curve from the base. In distinction from erect and from decumbent or horizontal.—Acute ascending paralysis. See paralysis.—Ascending latitude, the latitude of a planet when moving toward the north pole.—Ascending letter, in type founding, a letter which reaches to the extreme upper part of the body of the type. In Roman types of the minuscule or "lower case" form the ascending letters are b, d, f, h, i, j, k, l, t. All capitals are ascending letters.—Ascending node, that point of a planet's orbit at which it passes the ecliptic to proceed northward. It is also called the northern node.—Ascending ovule, in bot, an ovule that is situated above the base of the ovary and directed upward.—Ascending rhythm, in pros, a rhythm or movement composed of feet in which the metrically accented part (commonly called the arsis) follows the metrically unaccented part (commonly called the thesis), as an iambic or anapestic rhythm opposed to descending rhythm, such as the trochaic or dactylic.—Ascending signs, the signs Capricornus, Aquarius, Pisces, Aries, Taurus, and Gemini, so called because the sun, while in them, is approaching the north celestial pole, which is to our view elevated.—Ascending vessels, in anat, those vessels which carry the blood upward or toward the superior parts of the body.

ascension (a-sen'shon), n. [ME. ascensoun, ascensoun, < L. ascensio(n)-, a rising, ascension, < ascendere, pp. ascensus, rise, ascend: see ascend] 1 The act of ascending; a rising, specifically, the bodily passing from earth to heaven of Christ, in the presence of his disciples (Mark xvi 19, Luke xxiv 50, 51, Acts i 1-11) — 2 [cap] The day on which the ascension of Christ is commemorated in the church, Ascension day — 3 That which rises or ascends, a fume

Men err in the theory of inebriation, conceiving the brain doth only suffer from vaporous ascensions from the stomach
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err.

4. In astron., the rising of a star or point above the horizon on the celestial sphere — 5 A going back in time, or in the order of genealogical succession, ascent — Apparent right ascension. See apparent — Ascension day, the fortieth day after Easter, on which the ascension of Christ is commemorated, some times called Holy Thursday — Oblique ascension, of a star, in astron., an arc of the equator intercepted between the vernal equinox or first point of Aries and that point of the equator which comes to the horizon at the same time with the star — Right ascension. (a) In old astron., vertical rising

The signs of right ascension begin from the head of Cancer to the end of Sagittaire, and thence signs arise more upright
Chaucer

(b) In mod. astron., the right ascension of a star or point of the sphere is the arc of the equator intercepted between its circle of declination and the vernal equinox or first point of Aries, reckoned toward the east. This meaning is derived from the conception of an observer at a point on the earth's equator where all the stars rise vertically ascensional (a-sen'shon-al), a [< ascension + -al] Relating to ascension or ascent, ascending or rising up

That idea [of the gun cotton rocket] was to place a disk or short cylinder of the gun cotton in the head of a rocket, the ascensional force of which should be employed to carry the disk to an elevation of 1,000 feet or thereabouts
Tyndall, Pop. Sci. Mo., XIII 281

Ascensional difference, in astron., the difference between the right and the oblique ascension of the same point on the surface of the sphere, used chiefly as expressing the difference between the time of the rising or setting of a body and six o'clock, or six hours from its meridian passage ascensive (a-sen'siv), a [< L. ascensus (pp of ascendere see ascend) + -ive] 1 Characterized by an ascending movement, tending to ascend, rising, tending to rise, or causing to rise Sir T. Browne — 2 In gram., increasing force, intensive, augmentative [Rare] ascend (a-sen't), v [< ascend, formed like descend, F. descendre, < descend, F. descendre] 1 The act of rising or ascending, upward movement as, the ascent of vapors, or of a balloon To him with swift ascent he up returned Milton, P. L. x 224

Hence — 2 A rising from a lower to a higher state, degree, or grade, advancement

As to the genesis of man and the universe, the less cultured tribes claimed to be an ascend from birds, fishes, snakes ascetically (a-set'ik-al-i), adv. In an ascetical manner, by the practice of asceticism, as an ascetic; to or toward asceticism as, persons ascetically inclined asceticism (a-set'ik-sizm), n [< ascetic + -ism]

1 The life or practice of an ascetic, the principles and historic course of the ascetics. In ancient Greece asceticism (ασκησις) meant the discipline undergone by athletes while training. In the schools of the Stoics the same word was applied to the controlling of the appetites and passions and the practice of virtue. Among Christians through contact with the Alexandrian school of philosophy, the word early came into use with a similar meaning, namely, the habitual use of self-discipline, such as had been practised by individuals and even by communities among the Jews. The object of this discipline was to control and subdue the bodily nature with its passions and desires as the stronghold of evil inherent in man since the fall of Adam, the means used being, fasting, celibacy, poverty, penance, and solitude, a mode of life which developed in the course of a few centuries into monasticism. Similar and even greater asceticisms have been practised from very early times by many among various pagan nations and in connection with various religious systems such as Hinduism, Buddhism, etc., under the influence of the idea that matter is essentially evil and that an approach to ideal good or an escape from the evils of existence can be effected only by subduing or torturing the body

Asceticism again, including under this term all efforts to withdraw from the world in order to cultivate a higher degree of sanctity, belongs naturally to a society which is somewhat rude, and in which isolation is frequent and easy
Locke, Europ. Morals, i 130

2 In theol., the theory or systematic exposition of the means, whether negative, as self-denial and abstinence, or positive, as the exercise of natural and Christian virtues, by which a complete conformity with the divine will may be attained. See ascetical theology, under ascetical. — Syn. Self-denial, Asceticism, etc. See self-denial ascham (as'kam), n [After Roger Ascham, who in 1545 published "Toxophilus," a celebrated treatise on archery] A cupboard or case to contain bows and sometimes arrows and other implements of archery Encyc. Brit.

Aschiza (as-ki'zā), n pl [NL, < Gr. a-priv + σχίζω, a cleft see schism] In Brauer's system of classification, a division of cyclophoridous dipterous insects or flies, of the suborder Cyclophorid, containing the families Syrphidae, Platyptorida, Phorida, and Pipunculidae, thus collectively contrasted with Schizophora (which see)

Aschizopoda (as-ki-zōp'ā-dū), n pl [NL, < (Gr. a-priv + σχίζω, a cleft, + ποδός (pod-), foot] A division of macrurous decapodous crustaceans, embracing most of the group, as distinguished from the Schizopoda or opossum-shrimps

ascl, n Plural of ascus

ascian (as'ian), n [< L. ascus, < Gr. ἄσκιος, without shadow, < a-priv + σκιά, shadow] A person who casts no shadow at noon. The inhabitants of the torrid zone alone fulfil this condition, having the sun twice a year in the zenith at noon

Ascidia (a-sid'i-ā), n pl [NL, pl of Ascidium, q v] 1 A class of animals connecting the molluscoid invertebrates with the Vertebrata, the tunicates, tunicaries, or sea-squirts, otherwise called Tunicata, Ascozoa, Urochorda, or Protovertebrata (in part), the ascidians. They are asymmetrical marine animals, simple or compound, fixed or free, with a monoganglionic nervous system, tubular heart, and no foot. The integument is a leathery sac, with two orifices, oral and anal. The young are free swimming and tadpole like, and in this larval condition show traces of vertebrate affinities in the possession of a notochord, or notochord of the tail, a condition retained permanently in one family the Appendiculariidae. They are found at low water mark on the sea beach, and, attached to stones, shells, and fixed objects, are dredged from deep water. An ascidian presents externally the appearance of a wine jar or double necked bottle, the one aperture of the bottle corresponding to the mouth and the other to the vent or excretory aperture. A feature in the organization of these animals is that a large proportion of the tough outer case or test is composed of cellulose, a starchy substance highly characteristic of plants. The mouth opening leads into a large branchial sac or breathing sac and from the bottom of this sac the digestive system, consisting of stomach and intestine, is continued, the intestine opening into a second sac, the atrial chamber. This latter cavity opens externally by the second aperture of the body, and also emits the effete water which has been used in breathing. A single nervous mass or ganglion represents the nervous system, this mass being placed between the two apertures of the body. Male and female reproductive organs exist in each ascidian. These animals may be simple, social or compound. In social ascidians the peduncles of a number of individuals are united into a common tubular stem with a partial common circulation of blood. The species are more or less gelatinous and some are used as food in China and on the shores of the Mediterranean. The Ascidia are divisible into two orders not well defined called Lophota and Tunicata and by other names one containing the Salpidae and Doliolidae the other the rest of the class. Also written Ascidia. See cuts under Ap pendularia, Doliolidae, Salpa and Tunicata.

Ascidacea (a-sid-i-a-se-a), n pl [NL, < Ascidium + -a] 1. Same as Ascidioda, 2.

Ascidia (a-sid-i-a), n pl [NL, pl of Ascidia, 2] 1. In Gegenbaur's system of classification, a division of Copepoda, embracing the true ascidians as distinguished from the Pyrosomatidae, Doliolidae, and Salpidae. It contains three groups, Simplex, Socialis, and Composita, or the simple, social, and compound ascidians. 2. Same as Tunicata, 1.

ascidian (a-sid-i-an), a and n [< Ascidium + -an] 1. a Of or belonging to the Ascidia or Tunicata.

II. n One of the Ascidia or Tunicata, a sea-squirt.

ascidiarium (a-sid-i-ā-r-i-um), n, pl ascidiaria (-ia) [NL, < Ascidium + -arium] A compound ascidium, consisting of two or more individual ascidiodozoids. See cut under Cyathozoid.

It is a fixed ascidium, may remain simple, or it may develop buds and give rise to a compound organism or Ascidium consisting of many ascidiodozoids united together. Huxley Anat. Invert., p. 511.

ascidiate (a-sid-i-āt), a [< Ascidium + -ate] Shaped like a small bottle, or like an ascidian.

Ascidicola (as-i-dik'ō-lā), n [NL, < Ascidium + L. coleri, inhabit] The typical genus of the family Ascidicolidae.

Ascidicolidae (a-sid-i-kol'i-dē), n pl [NL, < Ascidicola + -idae] A family of copepod entomostracous crustaceans, parasitic upon ascidians.

ascidiiform (a-sid-i-fōrm), a [< Ascidium + L. forma, shape] 1. Shaped like an ascidian, bottle-shaped — 2. Having the structure of an ascidian, related to the Ascidia.

ascidiid (a-sid-i-id), n One of the Ascidida.

Ascididae (as-i-dī'ē), n pl [NL, < Ascidia, 2, + -idae] A family of solitary ascidians, typically with the branchial aperture 8-lobed, the atrial 6-lobed, the branchial sac not folded, the tentacles simple, and the genitalia in close connection with the mantle. It is the typical family of the ascidians proper, including the simple forms, as Molgula, Cynthia, Ascidia or Phallusia etc., as distinguished from the social and compound forms, and contains many species. See cut under Ascidia.

ascidiiform (a-sid-i-fōrm), a Same as ascidiiform.

ascidioid (a-sid-i-oid), a [< Ascidium + -oid] Of or resembling an ascidian as, an ascidioid form. Huxley.

Ascidioda (a-sid-i-oi'dā), n pl [NL, < Ascidia, Ascidium, + -oda] 1. Same as Ascidia, Ascozoa, or Tunicata, as a class or phylum of animals — 2. An order of Ascidia, continuous with Ascozoa (which see). Also called Ascidacea.

ascidiology (a-sid-i-ol'ō-jī), n [< Ascidium + -ology] That department of zoology which treats of the ascidians or tunicates.

ascidiodozoid (a-sid-i-dō'oid), n [< Ascidium + zoid] One of the zooids or individual organisms which collectively constitute a compound ascidian or ascidiarium (which see). See cuts under Cyathozoid and Doliolidae.

In the compound or social Tunicata, many ascidiodozoids, which are united by a common test into an ascidiarium, are produced by gemmation from a solitary metamorphosed larva. Huxley Anat. Invert., p. 522.

Ascidium (a-sid-i-um), n [NL, < Gr ασκίδιον, dim of ασκος, a leathern bag, a wine-skin see ascus] 1. [Also less prop. Ascidia] A genus of tunicates, typical of the principal family of the class Ascidia, some of whose species are known as sea-squirts, synonymous with Phallusia — 2. [l c, pl ascidia (-ia)] In bot. (a) Any tubular, horn-shaped, or pitcher-like formation, arising usually from the union of the margins of a leaf or other organ, or from the disproportionate growth of some part. The ascidium ordinarily known as a pitcher as in the pitcher plants (Nepenthes) and side saddle flowers (Sarracenia) is often covered by a lid and contains a secreted fluid in which insects are drowned and macerated. The small aquatic sacs of species of Utricularia are also ascidia. See cut in next column. (b) Same as ascus, 1.

There is a parallelism between the fructification of lichens and the asciferous section of fungi. Encyc. Brit., XIV, 557.

ascigerous (a-sij'e-rus), a [< NL ascus, q. v., + L. gerere, bear] In bot., bearing asci as lichens and ascomycetous fungi. See ascus, and compare ascosporous.

ascites (a-si'tēz), n [L, < Gr ασκίτης (see ascos, disease), a kind of dropsy, < ασκός, a leathern bag, a bladder see ascus] In pathol., a collection of serous fluid in the peritoneal cavity, dropsy of the belly.

ascitic (a-sit'ik), a Relating to ascites, dropsical.

ascitical (a-sit'i-kul), a Same as ascitic.

ascititious (as-i-tish'us), a Same as ascititious.

ascient (as-kient'), adv. A Scotch form of asciant.

Asclepiad (as-klē'pi-ad), n [< L Asclepiadeum (sc. metrum), < Gr Ἀσκληπιάδης (see asci, meter), the meter of Ἀσκληπιάδης, a Greek poet, lit. descendant of Asclepius, < Ἀσκληπιός, Asclepius see Asclepius] 1. [cap] In an. pros., an Asclepiad (verse or line) — 2. In bot., a member of the order Asclepiadaceae — 3. [cap] One of the Asclepiads (which see).

Asclepiadaceae (as-klē'pi-a-dē'sē-dē), n pl [NL, < Asclepias (-ad-) + -aceae] A natural order of gamopetalous exogenous plants, with pollen in waxy masses, the pollinia attached in pairs to glandular appendages of the stigma, the fruit a pair of follicles, and the seed comose. They are mainly tropical, many of them African and Indian twining shrubs usually with milky juice which often has strong emetic and purgative qualities. It includes the milkweed (Lobelia), carillon flower (Stapelia), wax plant (Hoya), and other handsome greenhouse plants, the Indian sarsaparilla (Hemidesmus Indicus), and several fiber plants, as species of Catrotropis and Marsdenia, a species of the latter genus yielding a blue dye resembling indigo.

Asclepiadaceous (as-klē'pi-a-dē'shi-us), a Belonging to the Asclepiadaceae.

Asclepiads (as-klē'pi-a-dē), n pl [NL see Asclepiad] Same as Asclepiads.

Asclepiadean (as-klē'pi-a-dē'an), a [< L Asclepiadeus (see Asclepiad) + -an] In an. pros., consisting or composed of Asclepiads.

In his combinations of the Asclepiadean [metr.] we note the grave and thoughtful temperance of tone which pervades those in which the three Asclepiadean lines are combined with one Glyconic. Encyc. Brit. XII, 186.

Asclepiadean strophe, a strophe or stanza composed of Asclepiads with or without other verses, such as Glyconics and Iambics.

Asclepiadic (as-klē'pi-a-dē'ik), a and n [< Asclepiad + -ic] 1. a Of or pertaining to the Asclepiad or Asclepiadic, a kind of verse.

II. n In an. pros., a verse consisting of a spondee, two (or three) chorambi, and an iambus, or, according to other authorities, a logædic verse consisting of a basis, three cyclic dactyls, of which the second is syncopated (or five cyclic dactyls, of which the second and fourth are syncopated), and a trocheal dipody catalectic. The shorter form is called the lesser, the longer the greater, Asclepiadic.

Ascidium of a Plant

Leaf of pitcher plant (Nepenthes) with a winged petiole and terminating in an operculate pitcher. (From L. C. Maunt and Decussis, a. Illustré générale Botanique.)

Asclepias (as-klē'pi-as), n [NL, < Gr ἀσκληπίας, an uncertain plant, < Ἀσκληπιός, Doric Ἀσκληπιός, Asclepius, > L Æsculapius, Æsculapius, the tutelary god of medicine] A large genus of North American herbs, natural order Asclepiadaceae, popularly known as milkweed or silkweed. The plants are perennial herbs with milky juice, mostly upright with opposite or verticillate leaves, the flowers in umbels, and the seeds tufted with long silky hairs. Of the more than 70 species, nearly 50 are found within the United States. The butterfly weed or pleurisy root A. tuberosa, has diaphoretic and mild purgative properties. The bastard Ipecacuanha of the West Indies, A. curatamarea, is a powerful emetic. Some of the species afford an excellent fiber.

ascocarp (as'kō-kārp), n [< Gr ασκός, a bag (see ascus), + καρπός, fruit] The developed fructification in Ascomycetes, consisting of asci and ascophores.

ascogenous (as-kōj'e-nus), a [< Gr ασκος, a bag (see ascus), + -γενής, producing see -genous] In bot., producing asci applied to the hyphae upon which asci are developed in the ascomycetous fungi.

ascogone (as'kō-gōn), n Same as ascogonium.

ascogonium (as-kō-gō'ni-um), n, pl ascogonia (-ia) [NL, < Gr ασκος, a bag (see ascus), + -γονος, producing see -gony] The female organ in certain of the lower cryptogams, which after fertilization develops asci. Also called carpogonium and archicarp.

Ascomycetes (as'kō-mī-sē'tēz), n pl [NL, < Gr ασκος, a bag (see ascus), + μύκης, pl μύκητες, a mushroom, akin to L. muscus see muscus] A family of fungi characterized by the formation of free spores within elongated cells (asci), often associated with alternation of generation. It includes a great variety of forms, such as the microscopic yeast fungi or fermenters, various mildews, ergot, the subterranean truffles, the more la. helveticas, etc., which represent the several orders Saccharomycetes, Perisporiacea, Pyrenomycetes, Tuberacea, and Discomycetes. Most of the lichens are now also generally considered as belonging to this family. See cut under ascus.

ascomycetous (as'kō-mī-sē'tus), a [< Ascomycetes + -ous] Of or pertaining to the Ascomycetes.

Ascomyzon (as-kō-mī'zon), n [NL, < Gr ασκος, a bag (see ascus), + μύζων, ppr of μύζω, suck in] The typical genus of the family Ascomyzontidae.

Ascomyzontidae (as'kō-mī-zon'ti-dē), n pl [NL, < Ascomyzon (-t-) + -idae] A family of parasitic epizoe crustaceans, of the order Siphonostoma.

ascon (as'kon), n, pl ascons, asconses (-konz, as-kō'nēz) [NL, < Gr ασκος, a bag see ascus] One of the Ascones, a sponge having the characters of the Ascones.

Ascones (as-kō'nēz), n pl [NL, pl of ascon] A group of the lowest and simplest chalk-sponges, having a ventricle with walls so thin that the inhalent pores open directly into the ventricular cavity distinguished from Leucones and Sycones. See Olynthus.

Asconidae (as-kōn-i-dē), n pl [NL, < ascon + -idae] A family of Calcipponina, the same as Ascones.

ascophore (as'kō-fōr), n [< Gr ασκοφόρος, bearing wine-skins, < ασκος, a bag (see ascus), + -φόρος, < φέρω = F. bear] In bot., the ascus-bearing form or stage of development in some groups of the Ascomycetes. See cut under ascus.

ascophorous (as-kōf'o-rus), a [As ascophore + -ous] In bot., bearing an ascus or asci applied to the hyphae in lichens, which develop asci at the end of the branches.

ascospore (as'kō-spōr), n [< Gr ασκος, a bag, + σπορος, seed see ascus and spore] In bot., one of a cluster of spores borne within an ascus.

The characteristic form of reproduction of the Ascomycetes is by ascospores formed within asci by free cell formation. Encyc. Brit., IX, 838.

ascosporous (as-kōspō-rus), a [As ascospore + -ous] Having ascospores as, "ascosporous fungi." Encyc. Brit., IV, 162.

Ascozoa (as-kō-zō'ā), n pl [NL, < Gr ασκος, a bag (see ascus), + ζῷον, an animal] A name of the tunicates or ascidians, synonymous with Ascidia, 1 (which see).

ascozoan (as-kō-zō'an), n [< Ascozoa + -an] One of the Ascozoa, an ascidian or tunicate.

ascozoic (as-kō-zō'ik), a [< Ascozoa + -ic] Of or pertaining to the Ascozoa, tunicate; ascidian.

ascribable (as-kri'ba-bl), a [< ascribe + -able] Capable of being ascribed or attributed; attributable.

Aselli, n Plural of Asellus 1

asellid (a-sel'id), n An isopod of the family Asellidae

Asellidae (a-sel'id-ē), n pl [NL, < Asellus + -idae] A family of isopodous crustaceans, of which the genus Asellus is the type. It also contains the genus Lamora of which the species L. terrestris, the gribble, is destructive to submerged wood. Other genera are Lara and Munna. Its various forms inhabit both fresh and salt water

Asellota (as-el'ō-tā), n pl [NL, < Asellus + -ota] A synonym of Asellidae

Asellus (a-sel'us), n [L, dim of asellus, an ass see asell] 1 [Pl Aselli (-i)] A name given to each of the two stars γ and δ (Cancri, lying east of the quadrangle of that constellation — 2 [NL] The typical genus of the family Asellidae. A. aquaticus, the water hog-louse, is a common form in fresh water asemia (a-sē'mi-k), n [NL, < Gr ασμια, having or giving no sign, < a- priv + σμια, a sign] In pathol, the loss of the power of forming or understanding any sign or symbol of thought, whether spoken, written, or acted. Also called asymbolia asepsis (a-sep'sis), n [NL, < Gr a- priv + σepsis, putrefaction] Absence of living germs of disease, putrefaction, or fermentation

asepta (a-sep'tā), n pl [NL, neut pl of aseptus, < Gr ασπτος, not liable to decay see aseptic] Things not liable to putrefy aseptic (a-sep'tik), a [Gr ἀσπτος, not liable to decay, < a- priv + σπτος, septic see septic] Free from the living germs of disease, fermentation, or putrefaction asepticity (as-sep-tis'i-ti), n [aseptic + -ity] The character or quality of being aseptic

There are absence of damp soil, asepticity of the air, and dryness of the atmosphere

Med News, XLVII

asepticize (a-sep'ti-siz), v. t., pret and pp. asepticized, ppr. asepticizing [aseptic + -ize] To render free from living germs of disease, fermentation, or putrefaction

asexual (a-sek'shū-al), a [Gr a- priv (a-) + sexual] 1 Not sexual, not sexed, having no sex, as a species or other group of animals which have no sexual system or organs — 2 Neuter, being of neither sex, as some individuals of species in which other individuals are male or female, or as some stages in the growth of individuals which later develop into male or female — 3 Effected or produced by other than sexual processes, agamic, agamogenetic as, asexual reproduction

A Section of Penicillium magnified 2 times of the fungus surrounding by its mycelium (c) the hymenium (h) which contains the ascus (a) A group of ascus (a) (a) highly magnified of sub-hymenial layer of hyphae from Schaeffer's Lehrbuch der Botanik

Little colonies of these parasites, the Cunnina, ultimately develop into medusae. Here is an asexual multiplication, but no true alternation of generation

Asexual reproduction, any process of propagation that is not effected by means of sexual organs as in bot in many of the cryptogams by cell division etc and in phanerogams when propagation is carried on by buds off shoots bulbs etc

asexually (a-sek'shū-al-i), adv In an asexual manner; agamically, agamogenetically

For what are the phenomena of Agamogenesis stated generally? An impregnated egg develops into an asexual form A this gives rise asexually to a second form of form, B more or less different from A B may multiply asexually again in the simpler cases, however it does not but acquiring sexual characters produces impregnated eggs from whence A once more arises

1 In bot (a) The popular name of trees belonging to the genus Fraxinus (which see). The common ash of Europe F. excelsa is native through the greater part of Europe, northern Africa, and some parts of Asia. It is a handsome ornamental tree and is exceedingly valuable for its timber which is close grained and remarkably tough and elastic. It was therefore in early times the chief material in the construction of bows and spears, and is now largely used wherever these qualities are needed. In its younger state the tree is called ground ash and a variety is well known in cultivation as weeping ash. The flowering ash, F. ornus, is a small tree of southern Europe, sometimes cultivated for ornament. It yields a saccharine exudation which forms the best known and most important of the various kinds of manna. In the United States several species of the genus are commonly known under the name, as the black ash, ground ash, or hoop ash, F. sambucifolia, the blue ash, F. quadrangulata, the green ash, F. viridis, the red ash, F. rubra, the water ash, F. platyphora, and the white ash, F. americana. The last is the most valuable, its wood closely resembles that of the European ash and is used for similar purposes. (b) The name (with some adjunct) of various trees or shrubs of other genera, generally from some resemblance in foliage or qualities of the wood to the common ash (See below) (c) Also, in parts of England, the name of some herbaceous plants, chiefly umbelliferous, as the ground-ash, or ashweed, Egopodium Podagraria and Angelica sylvestris, and the sweet ash, Inula sylvestris — 2 The wood of the ash-tree, hence, something made of ash, as the shaft of a lance or spear

2 Fine material thrown out of a volcano in eruption. It is not like ordinary ashes a residuum of the combustion of a substance containing carbonaceous mingled with inorganic matter but is finely pulverized lava, derived in part from the actual tearing asunder of the not fully consolidated material by the expansive force of the gases which it contains, and in part from mechanical pulverization by friction in the chimney of the volcano. Large particles are called cinders, coherent masses of still larger size, scoriae, cinders, and bombs. If the erupted ash falls into water, they assume a stratified form. Rocks of this character have been called igneo aqueous and pluto neptunian. See lava, volcano, and tuff.

7. To invite as, to ask guests to a wedding or entertainment — To ask in church, to publish banns of marriage [The verb ask is used in this phrase because the publication is really an inquiry whether any one can state any valid objection to the marriage] = Syn 1 to 4. Ask, Request, Beg, Demand, Claim, Require, Solicit, Beseech, Entreat, Crave, Supplicate, Implore, Importune

Ask is the generic word in this list, it implies neither that what is asked must be rendered, nor, on the other hand, that it would be a favor Demand, claim, and require ask imperatively or authoritatively the others call for a favor with different degrees of urgency or humility Beseech, solicit, entreat, importune, and sometimes beg, imply great urgency, crave, supplicate, and implore imply great urgency and great dependence or humility Request is a little more formal or carefully civil than ask as, your attendance is requested Beg is primarily to ask as a beggar, sometimes, by the hyperbole of social usage, to ask as a favor real or professed as, I beg your pardon Demand and claim most often refer to things require applies more often to action as he *demand*ed his share, he claimed the whole, he required me to come, he required some proof to back my demand and substantiate my claim Solicit is urgent but less so than the words that follow it as, he solicited my vote Beseech is most applicable to the act of asking on the ground of pure favor Entreat implies continued appeal or representations of a moving kind Crave is almost or quite object like beg, it has been taken into polite forms of speech, and in that use robbed of most of its force Supplicate and implore are, figuratively, modes of prayer as to a superior being, they imply urgent or desperate appeal, perhaps in many words To importune is generally to beg in a persistent, wearying way, with urgency, but perhaps without especial dependence or humility

To ask and have, command and be obeyed
Marlowe, Tamburlaine, i iv 8
To night we hold a solemn supper, sir,
And I'll request your presence Shak Macbeth, iii 1

Pope, Mit of Horace, II 1 232

Importune him for my money, he not ceases
Shak, I of A, II 1

5 and 6 Ask, Inquire, Question, Interrogate. Ask is here also the generic word. It is simple and informal. Inquire may be used in the endeavor to be civil, or it may express a more minute examination into facts, as, to inquire (into, as to) the causes of discontent. To question in this sense implies the asking of a series of questions, it being supposed that the truth is hard to get at, through ignorance, reluctance, etc. In the person questioned. Interrogate is essentially the same as question, but more formal, as, to question a child or servant about his conduct, to interrogate a witness, an applicant for office, etc. Questioning or interrogation might be resorted to where asking, asking a question, or inquiring would meet with a friendly response.

If we encountered a man of rare intellect, we should ask him what books he read.
Emerson, Letters and Social Aims

I promised to inquire carefully
About a schoolmaster for the fair Bianca
Shak, I of the 8 1 2

the horned viper, of the genus Cerastes, a snake about 15 inches long. The name has also been commonly applied to the Naja haje, a species attaining a length of 3 or 4 feet related to and resembling the Indian cobra, Naja tripudians. It is of a mottled green and brown color, with the skin of the neck distensible, though less so than that of the true cobra. This serpent is of frequent occurrence along the Nile, and is the sacred serpent of ancient Egypt, represented commonly in art as a part of the head-dress of kings and divinities, and often connected with their emblems as a symbol of royal power. In archaeology it is usually known as the uraeus. 2 The common viper or adder of Europe, a feebly poisonous serpent, formerly named Vipera communis, now Pelias berus, of the family Viperidae. The aspects are nine in number: (1) semicircle, a difference of longitude of 90° (2) semisquare of 45° (3) sextile of 60° (4) quintile of 72° (5) square or quartile of 90° (6) trine of 120° (7) sesquialterate, of 135° (8) biquintile, of 144° (9) opposition of 180°. To these may be added conjunction, which occurs when the planets have the same longitude. Good aspects are the semicircle, sextile, quintile, trine and biquintile. Bad aspects are the semisquare, square, sesquialterate and opposition. Mundane aspects are such as are formed by the houses in horary astrology and by the seasons of the planets in nativities asphaltum (as-fal'tum), n. [NL see asphalt] One of the so-called bituminous substances which are widely diffused over the earth, and are of great practical importance. See bitumen and bituminous.

The asphaltums of various localities differ from each other considerably in the mineral composition, as is proved by their different chemical reactions. They all agree, however, in being amorphous, in having the luster and general appearance of pitch (whence the name of mineral pitch, often applied to them) in melting at about the temperature of boiling water and in taking fire when heated and burning with a bright but smoky flame. They differ essentially from coal in being more or less soluble in various reagents, such as oil of turpentine, then, and alcohol. Asphaltum seems, in most cases at least, to have resulted from the hardening of the more liquid forms of bituminous substances, namely, maltha and petroleum, which have oozed out upon the surface and become inspissated by oxidation or evaporation of their more volatile portions, or by both causes combined. The most interesting locality of asphaltum is the so-called pitch lake. In the island of Trinidad, about a mile and a half in circumference, and filled with asphaltum, which near the shore is quite solid, but near the center, in places, is soft and bubbling. Most of what is called asphaltum consists of this material more or less mixed with sand or other mineral substances. Asphaltum is extensively used in a variety of ways, and especially for pavements, foot walks, and roofing. For this purpose the material is prepared by mixing it with hot sand or fine gravel, or by causing it to be absorbed by paper. Certain kinds of asphaltic rock, or asphalt (see asphalte), as they are frequently called, are peculiarly adapted for pavements or other special purposes. The localities of Asphaltum in France and Val de Travers in Switzerland are the most important of this kind. At each of these the asphalt consists of limestone impregnated with bituminous material to the amount of from 4 to 16 per cent. This rock, especially that from Val de Travers, has the remarkable property of forming without any admixture, an extraordinarily durable and elastic roadway, and is, although expensive, extensively used for that purpose in Paris and other large cities of Europe. The rock has only to be heated, when it crumbles to powder, in which condition it is compressed in molds into blocks, or simply spread over the surface required to be covered, and packed or pressed by cattle or roller when, after cooling, it assumes a condition closely resembling that of the original rock. See maltha, naphtha, and petroleum. Also asphalt.

aspic, aspick (as'pik), n. [Early mod. E. also aspice, < F. aspic, < Pr. aspic, < L. aspicus (aspic), an asp see asp 2] 1 A venomous serpent same as asp 2, but used chiefly in poetry.

That to a woman of her hopes bequilt,
A viper trod on, or an aspic's mild.

Patches, Spanish Curate, iv 1

Thence she pointed with a laugh,
Showing the aspic's bite. — Johnson, Fair Women

aspic (as'pik), n. [Early mod. E. aspicke, < F. aspic, in huite d'aspic for huite de spic (so first in E., "oil of aspicke"), spic, lavender spike, orig. spikenard see spike] The great lavender, Lavandula spica. See lavender.

aspic (as'pik), n. [F., perhaps < aspic, an asp (see aspic), with allusion to its coolness, there being a French proverbial saying, "Cold as an aspic" (littre), or perhaps from the (supposed) custom of flavoring or seasoning this dish with spikes of lavender see aspic 2] In cookery, a side dish consisting of a clear, savory meat-jelly containing fowl, game, fish, etc.

aspiculate (as-pik'ū-lāt), a. Same as aspidiculous.

aspidiculous (as-pik'ū-lus), a. [Gr. a- priv. + L. spiculum, a point see spiculum] Having no hard spicula.

Aspidisca (as-pi-dis'kā), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς, aspis, fem. form of ασπίς, a boss, dim. of ασπίς (aspis), a shield] 1 A genus of elutriate infusorians, type of the family Aspidiscula. Ehrenberg, 1840 — 2 A genus of lepidopterous insects.

Aspidiscidae (as-pi-dis'kā-dē), n. pl. [NL, < Aspidisca, 1, + -idae] A family of hypotrichous ciliata.

Aspidium (as-pid'i-um), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίδιον, a little shield, dim. of ασπίς (aspis), a shield] 1 A genus of ferns variously limited, but in its broad sense including all those in which the dot-like sori are covered by a roundish, peltate, or reniform indusium. Those with a reniform indusium, attached by the sinus are often separated as the genus Nephrodium. When the indusium is oblique or oblong the species are not distinguishable from forms of Polypodium. The genus is cosmopolitan, including nearly 800 species, which vary greatly in size, texture, venation, and division of the fronds. About 40 species are found within the United States. The common species are usually known as wood ferns or shield ferns. See shield fern.

2 A genus of hymenopterous insects. Also Aspidion.

Aspidobranchia (as'pi-dō-brang'ki-ā), n. pl. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς (aspis), a shield, + βράγχια, gills] A group of prosobranchiate gastropods, approximately equivalent to Scutibranchia, Rhynchoglossa, or Chiastoneura. It includes such families as Fossorellidae, Haliotidae, etc. Also Aspidobranchiata.

Aspidochirota (as'pi-dō-ki-rō-tē), n. pl. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς (aspis), a shield, + χείρ, a hand] A group of ordinary pedate holothurians or sea-cucumbers, with peltate tentacles equivalent to the family Holothuridae contrasted with Dendrochirota (which see) Also spelled Isopodochirota.

In the Aspidochirota, or holothurians with disk or shield shaped tentacles furnished with tentacular arms, the left respiratory tree is bound to the body walls, there are no retractor muscles to the pharynx, and Cuvierian organs are present. These are the highest type of Holothuroidea, and are mainly tropical in their distribution.

Stand Nat Hist, I 182.

aspidochirote (as'pi-dō-ki-rōt), a. Pertaining or belonging to the Aspidochirota. Also spelled aspidochirote.

Aspidogaster (as'pi-dō-gas'tér), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς (aspis), a shield, + γάστρον, stomach] A genus of Trematoda, or fluke-worms, parasitic in the pericardial cavity of the fresh-water mussel A. conchicola is an example. See cut under Trematoda.

Aspidoglossa (as'pi-dō-glos'sā), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς (aspis), a shield, + γλῶσσα, a tongue (ligula)] A genus of beetles, family Carabidae, of the group Scaritini. About 20 species are known, mostly from Central or South America. One, A. subangulata (Chandler), occurs in the more southern portion of the United States east of the Rocky Mountains. It is an elongate, convex and shining insect, nearly 8 millimeters in length, with very stout femoral legs, and deeply punctate striate tibia. Its color is black with a greenish tinge, but the antennae, legs, and apex of the elytra are reddish. It is found on moist ground, where it preys on soft bodied insects.

Aspidonectes (as'pi-dō-nek'tér), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς (aspis), a shield, + νηκτερι, a swimmer, < νηχεν, swim] A genus of leather-back or soft-shelled turtles.

Aspifer is a common, carnivorous voracious species of North America.

Aspidophora (as-pi-dōf'ō-rā), n. pl. [NL, nout pl. of aspidophorus, adj. see Aspidophorus] 1 In Latreille's system of classification, a section of his phyllopodous branchiopods, containing the genera Ipas and Lepidurus, and equivalent to the modern family Ipodidae of the order Phyllopodata. Also Aspidophora. See Podostomata — 2 In Allman's system of classification a sub-order of polychaetes constituted for the reception of Rhabdopleura.

Aspidophorus (as-pi-dōf'ō-rus), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίδοφορος, shield-bearing, < ασπίς (aspis), a shield, + -φορος, < φορεω = E. bear 1] A genus of acanthopterygian fishes armed with shield-like scales synonymous with Agonus.

aspidorhynchid (as'pi-dō-ring'kid), n. A fish of the family Aspidorhynchidae.

Aspidorhynchidae (as'pi-dō-ring'ki-dē), n. pl. [NL, < Aspidorhynchus, 1, + -idae] In Günther's system of classification, a family of lepidosteoid fishes with an elongated body covered with ganoid scales, a series of enlarged scales along the sides, jaws prolonged into a beak, the vertebral column homocercal, the fins furnished with fulcra, and the dorsal fin opposite the anal. The species are extinct, they lived during the Mesozoic epoch.

Aspidorhynchus (as'pi-dō-ring'kus), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς (aspis), a shield, + ρυγχος, a snout, a beak] 1 The typical genus of Aspidorhynchidae. Agassiz, 1843 — 2 A genus of reptiles.

— 3 A genus of worms.

Aspidotraca (as-pi-dōs'tra-kā), n. pl. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίς (aspis), a shield, + δοτράκον, a shell] In Burmeister's system of classification, one of three orders of Crustacea, divided into five sub-orders called Parasita, Lophyropoda, Phyllo-poda, Curripedia, and Pacilopoda. See these words.

Aspila (as'pi-lā), n. [NL, < Gr. ἀσπίλος, spotless, < a- priv. + σπίλος, spot, speck] 1 A genus

of moths, family Noctuidæ, founded by Guénée. The larvae are smooth, soft leaf feeders. A. nigriventris is a beautiful moth with olivaceous forewings, marked with three distinct pale lines, relieved by a slender deep red shade.

aspirant (as'pī-ant or as'pī-rant), n and a [Fr < asp + -ant] Of or pertaining to an asp, snakey as, "aspirant venom," Quarles.

aspirant (as'pī-ant or as'pī-rant), n and a [F aspirant, a candidate (prop. ppr), < L aspirant (-is, ppr of aspirare (> F aspirer), aspirare see aspire] 1 One who aspires, one who seeks advancement, elevation, or preference.

Our young aspirant to the name and honours of an English noble.

Bancroft Hist. U. S., I, 196.

II a 1 Aspiring, ambitious as, "our aspirant souls," Mrs Browning—2 Ascending, mounting up as, aspirant flames [Rare in both uses.]

aspire (as'pī-rāt), v, pret and pp aspirated, ppr aspiring [L aspiratus, pp of aspirare, give the h-sound to, breathe or blow upon see aspire] I. trans 1 To pronounce with a breathing or an audible emission of breath, pronounce with such a sound as that of the letter h as, we aspire the words house and honour, but not hour and honor, cockneys often aspire words beginning with a vowel.

Such mutters as were originally aspirated—that is to say, had an audible bit of an h pronounced after them.

Whitney Lang and Study of Lang, p. 93.

2 To remove by aspiration. Aspiring winnowing-machine, one in which aspiration or suction is used instead of a blast. See winnowing.

II. intrans To be uttered with an aspirate or strong breathing [Rare.]

Where a vowel ends a word, the next begins either with a consonant, or what is its equivalent, for our u and h aspirate.

Duden.

aspire (as'pī-rāt), a and n [L aspiratus, pp see the v rh.] I a Pronounced with the aspirate or rough breathing, pronounced with the h-sound, or with a strong emission of breath.

The And often showing an aspirate initial where the Sanskrit has the unaspirate, and vice versa.

Halliday, Essays, p. 172.

Holler, Elem. of Speech.

II n An aspirated sound, or a sound like our h a sound with which the h-sound is combined, or which corresponds historically to a sound of this nature thus, the Sanskrit kh, gh, bh, etc., and the Greek ch, th, ph (γ, θ, φ) are called aspirates, as are also the English f, th, which are more properly called breathings or spirants also, a character or combination of characters representing a sound thus described, as the letter h, the Greek rough breathing, etc.

aspirated (as'pī-rāt-ed), p a Same as aspirate. aspiration (as'pī-rā'shon), n [L aspiratio (-is), a breathing upon, aspiration of a sound, the aspirate letter h, < aspirare see aspire, v] 1 The act of aspirating or breathing, a breath.

Stech, Englishman, No. 26.

2 An aspirated sound, a phonetic breathing. The h the pure aspiration is an expulsion of flatus through the position of the adjacent letter, whether vowel, semivowel, or nasal.

Whitney, Life and Growth of Lang, p. 67.

The Latin grammarian Priscian about 500 A. D. tells us that the sound then expressed by f was originally signified by p with an aspiration (that is by ph).

Halliday, Essays, p. 172.

3 The act of aspiring or ardently desiring, an ardent wish or desire, chiefly after what is elevated or spiritual.

She feels neither inclination to pleasure nor aspiration after virtue.

Johnson, Rambler, No. 112.

The Centurion, XXXII, 928.

Aspisoma (as-pī-sō'mā), n. [NL, irreg < Gr ασπίς, a shield, + σώμα, body] A genus of South American fireflies, of the family Telephoridae, belonging to the malacodermatous division of pentamerous (oleoptera). A lineatum is the common firefly of the Amazon region.

Asplanchna (as-plangk'nā), n [NL, < Gr ασπλάνχνη, without bowels, < ἀ- priv. + σπλάνχνα, bowels] A genus of free Rotifera, having a rounded sac-like body, devoid of appendages, and possessing neither anus nor intestine, whence the name. The genus is typical of the family Asplanchnidae.

asplanchnic (as-plangk'nīk), a. [L < Gr ασπλάνχνη, without bowels (see Asplanchna), + -ic] Having no intestine or alimentary canal; anenterous.

asplanchnid (as-plangk'nīd), n. A rotifer of the family Asplanchnidae.

Asplanchnidae (as-plangk'nī-dē), n pl. [NL, < Asplanchna + -idae] A family of rotifers having the trochal disk rounded, the wreath single and marginal, the trophi inequidate, and no intestine, anus, or foot. Asplanchna is the leading genus.

Asplenium (as-plē-ni-um), n [NL, < Gr ασπλήνιον, also ασπλάνιον, usually ασπλάνιον (> L asplenium), spleenwort, supposed to be a cure for the spleen, < α- euphonic + σπλήν, spleen see spleen] A genus of ferns characterized by linear or oblong sori lying on the veins (which are free in most species) and obliquely to the costa, the involucre being conformable to the sori and opening toward the costa when single. It is the largest genus of the order (Filices) excepting Polypodiaceae, and its species are found in all parts of the world, wherever ferns grow. It includes very varied forms. Many of the species are evergreen, and some are cultivated for their beauty. Among the more common species, generally known as spleenwort, are the lady fern (A. Filix femina), black maidenhair (A. Trichomanes), distributed around the globe, wall rue (A. Ruta muraria), and ebony spleenwort (A. ebnerianum).

aspidiot, n. An obsolete and corrupt form of aspidiot (Aspidiotus ramosus). Also aspidiot. Holme, 1688.

asporous (as-spō-rus), a [L asporus, < ἀ- priv. + σπορος, seed see spore] Without spores, not developing spores.

In the case of the simplest and most minute Schizomyxetes (Micrococcus, etc.) no definite spores have been discovered, any one of the vegetative micrococci may commence a new series of cells by growth and division. We may call these forms asporous, at any rate provisionally.

Encyc. Brit., XXI, 404.

asport (as-pōrt'), v t [L asportare, carry away < ab- away (see ab-), + portare, carry] To carry away, especially, to remove feloniously. N. E. D. [Rare.]

asportation (as-pōrt-tā'shon), n [L asportatio (-is), a carrying away, < asportare, pp asportatus see asport] 1 A carrying away or off. [Rare.]

Aubrey whose "Miscellanies" were published in 1696, had no doubts whatever as to the physical asportation of the witch.

Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 115.

2 In criminal law, the felonious removal of goods from the place where they were deposited. It may be theft, though the goods be not carried from the house or apartment.

Gr. asior, a wood-louse.] 1 A solidungulate quadruped of the family Equidae, the Equus asinus.

This animal has long ears, a short mane, and a tall covered with long hairs at the end. It is usually ash colored with a black cross over the shoulders, formed by a longitudinal and a transverse dark streak. The tame or domestic ass is patient, and carries a heavy burden. It is slow, but very sure footed, and for this reason very useful on rough steep and hilly ground. The ass is supposed to be a native of central Asia (by Darwin and others, of Abyssinia), where vast troops roam over the great deserts in a wild state. The wild ass is a fine fleet animal and is accounted the noblest game in Persia, where its flesh is prized as venison is with us. The domesticated ass has become the type of obstinacy and stupidity. See jackass.

2 Any wild species of the subgenus Asinus, as the dziggetai or hemione, onager, etc. — 3 A dull, heavy, stupid fellow, a dolt, a fool, a blockhead.

If this be not a fit of some violent affection I am an ass in understanding.

Forl., Love's Sacrifice, II. 2.

4 A post in the bridge of a pulp-vat on which the mold is placed to drain. — Asses' bridge (pons asinorum), a name humorously given to the fifth proposition of the first book of Euclid's Elements of Geometry. See pons asinorum. — Feast of asses. See foal.

ass² (as), n [Scotch form of ash²] Ashes.
ass³ (as), n A unit of weight in use in different parts of Germany until the adoption of the metric system. It was equal to 5 centigrams, or three quarters of a grain troy.

assacu (as'a-ko), n [Braz.] A euphorbiaceous tree of South America, Hura crepitans, the bark and sap of which contain a very acrid poisonous principle. Applied to the skin the milky sap produces a pustular eruption, the natives prepare from it a poisonous drink also used as an anthelmintic. The seeds are most violently purgative. A decoction of the bark is used as a remedy for elephantiasis, and the pounded leaves are used for rheumatism.

assagai (as'a-gi), n [Also written assegai, assagay, assegay, and formerly assaque, azagani (also zagaye, zagué, < F. zagave), and early mod. A colony migrated from Persia to Syria, settled in various places with their chief seat on the mountains of Lebanon, and became remarkable for their secret murders in blind obedience to the will of their chief. Their religion was a compound of Manichæism, Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedanism. One article of their creed was that the Holy Spirit resided in their chief and that his orders proceeded from God himself. The chief of the sect is best known by the denomination old man of the mountain (Arabic shaykh al-jabal, chief of the mountains). These barbarous chieftains and their followers spread terror among nations far and near for almost two centuries. In the time of the crusades they murdered to the number of 50,000, and presented a formidable obstacle to the arms of the Christians. They were eventually subdued by the sultan Bihars about 1272.

Royal assent, in England, the approbation given by the sovereign in Parliament to a bill which has passed both houses after which it becomes law. This assent may be given in two ways (a) In person, when the sovereign comes to the House of Peers, the Commons are sent for, and the titles of all the bills which have passed are sent for, and the assent is declared in Norman French by the clerk of the Parliament (b) By letters patent under the great seal, signed by the sovereign, and notified in his or her absence. A money bill, or bill of supply, passed by the House of Commons, is presented by the Speaker for the royal assent = syn Assent, Consent, Concurrence, Acquiescence, acquiescence. Assent is primarily an act of the understanding; consent is distinctly the act of the will as, I assent to that proposition, I consent to his going. Baxter speaks of justifying faith as the assenting trust of the understanding and the consenting trust of the will. As sent is not yet altogether excluded from the field of the will, but tends to express a feebler action of the will than it formerly did, or than consent does (Compare Luke xxiii 24 (margin), 'Pilate assented that it should be as they requested,' with the formal consent in the royal assent to a bill Concurrence is a running of minds in the same channel, an agreement in opinion or decision Acquiescence is a state or act of quiet submission to a decision, an act, or the prevalence of an opinion, because it is near enough to one's wishes, or not worth resisting, or impossible to resist, but not because it is entirely acceptable

Assent I have described to be a mental assent, in its very nature then it is of the mind, and not of the lips
J H Newman, Grammar of Assent, p 11

If any faction of men will require the assent and consent of other men to a vast number of disputable and undisturbed things, and, it may be, a mathematical falsehood among the first of them, and utterly renounce all Christian communion with all that shall not give that assent and consent, we look upon those to be separatists, we dare not to be so narrow spirited

C Mather, Mag Chris, Int to III

=Syn 1 Industry, Assiduity, Application, Diligence, Constancy, Perseverance, Persistence, care, attention, watchfulness, sedulousness, patience, Diligence in labor often conveys the idea of quickness Industry keeps at work, leaving no time idle Assiduity (literally, a sitting down to work) sticks quietly to a particular task, with the determination to succeed in spite of its difficulty, or to get it done in spite of its length Application, literally, bends itself to its work, and is, more specifically than assiduity, a steady concentration of one's powers of body and mind as, he was a man of extraordinary powers of application, Newton attributed all his own success to application Diligence is literally fondness for one's work, and so, by a natural transfer, industry that is alert Constancy is the power to continue unchanged, as in affection, or to hold on in any particular course or work It goes more deeply into character than the others Perseverance suggests obstacles from without or within which are steadily met, and is morally neutral Persistence may be good, but it is more often an evil perseverance, as obstinacy or a determination to carry one's point against unwillingness or refusal on the part of others We speak of plodding industry, patient assiduity, steady application, great diligence, unshaken constancy, undaunted perseverance, persistence that will not take No for an answer

He [Richardson] advanced rapidly by industry and good conduct, was taken into partnership, and ultimately became the head of an extensive business

Articles of association or incorporation. See article — Association of ideas (an expression invented by Locke) or mental association, in psychol., the tendency of a sensation, perception, feeling, volition, or thought to recall to consciousness others which have previously co-existed in consciousness with it or with states similar to it. Thus the name of a friend is associated with his personal appearance, age, place of residence, and so on, and the sound of the name brings into consciousness involuntarily one or more of these associated ideas. The special laws of association, though variously stated by psychologists are usually admitted to be those of contiguity and similarity, that is, ideas recall ideas which have occurred along with them, and also those which are similar to them. These are called the principles of objective and subjective association. The doctrine of association has played an important part in the history of modern English psychology and philosophy

The phrase, intrinsic and extrinsic association, might be introduced very appropriately to distinguish associations founded on intrinsic resemblances of mental states from those which merely imply the extrinsic accident of simultaneous occurrence in consciousness T Clarke Murray

Hence—2 In phys, having no tendency to take a definite (fixed) position, without directive power. used especially of a magnetic needle whose directive property has been neutralized. A needle may be rendered astatic in various ways, but most simply by the proximity of another needle of the same intensity fixed parallel to it, and with the poles reversed, the north pole of the one being adjacent to the south pole of the other. In this position the needles neutralize each other, and are therefore not affected by the magnetism of the earth, though they are still subject to the influence of an electric current properly situated. Such needles were formerly employed in the electric telegraph, and they form an essential part of the astatic galvanometer.

astatically (as-tat'i-kal-i), adv In an astatic manner.

astaticism (as-tat'i-sizim), n [< astatic + -ism.] The state or quality of being astatic.

Acute and astute, why are you not also omniscient?

Charlotte Brontë, Shirley, xx

= Syn Sagacious, Sage, Knowing, Astute, Subtle. Sagacious and sage are used only in good sense, and when applied to persons generally suggest the wisdom of age or experience. The knowing man has wide knowledge and often penetration. The word knowing has also a humorous cast, as, he gave me a knowing wink, it may be used ironically, as, he is a little too knowing, that is, he thinks he knows more than he does. It may be used of knowing more than one has a right to know. It sometimes suggests a disposition to make ill use of knowledge, as, a knowing leer. Astute is often the same as sagacious, but is susceptible of an unfavorable sense in the direction of a narrow shrewdness, slyness, or cunning. It often means a samity that knows how to be silent. It is frequently applied to looks. Subtle, in its good sense, implies great acuteness, delicacy, or refinement in mental action, as, a subtle reasoner. For its bad sense, see cunning.

Another effect of public instability is the unreasonable advantage it gives to the sagacious, the enterprising, and the moulded few, over the industrious and uninformed mass of the people

Atlantis (at-lan'tis), n [< Gr Ätlan-tis, see Ätlan-tis] A mythical island of vast extent, mentioned by Plato and other ancient writers, and placed by them in the far West

atlanto-epistropheal (at-lan'tō-ep'i-strō-fō'al), a [< atlas (atlant-) + epistropheus + -al] In anat, pertaining to the atlas and epistropheus or axis atlanto-occipital (at-lan'tō-ok-sip'i-tal), a [< atlas (atlant-) + occiput (occipit-) + -al] In anat, pertaining to the atlas and the occipital bone atlanto-odontoid (at-lan'tō-ō-don'toid), a [< atlas (atlant-) + odontoid] In anat, pertaining to the atlas and the odontoid process of the axis.

atlantosaurid (at-lan-tō-sä'id), n A dinosaurian reptile of the family Atlantosauridae.

Atlantosauridae (at-lan-to-sä'i-dä), n pl [< NL, < Atlantosaurus + -ida] A family of sauropodous dinosaurian reptiles with a pituitary canal, the ischia directed downward and meeting at the middle, a hollow sacrum, and the anterior and caudal vertebrae excavated by lateral cavities. It is a group of gigantic Jurassic herbivorous lizards. O C Marsh

Atlantosaurus (at-lan-tō-sä'rus), n [< Gr Ätlaos (Ätlan-tis), in allusion to their size, + sauros, lizard] A genus of dinosaurs the species of which were of gigantic size, the type of the family Atlantosauridae or wanting. The general form of the bone is annular, it revolves about a pivot furnished by the odontoid process of the axis, and follows the rotatory movements of the head upon the neck. It is commonly ankylized with the axis in Cetacea. See ankylosis.

4. A bound collection of maps. The word was first used in this sense by Mercator in the sixteenth century, in allusion to the Atlas of mythology, whose figure, represented as bearing a globe on his shoulders, was given on the title page of such works.

Hence—5. A volume of plates or tables illustrative or explanatory of some subject.—6. A size of writing- or drawing-paper, 26 by 33 or 34 inches.—7. [NL.] In entom., a large lamelliform beetle of the family Scarabæidae, the atlas beetle, Chalcosoma atlas, about 3 inches long, and of a brilliant metallic-green color.

atlas (at'las), n. [= Sp. atlas = G. atlās = Sw. atlas = Dan. atlas, atlas, satun, < Hind. atlas, < Ar. atlas, satīn, < atlas, smooth, bare, blank, < tulasa, make smooth, delete.] A kind of satin or a word formerly used in the Levant and in India.

atlas-folio (at'las-fō'liō), n. [atlas, 6, + folio] A large square folio size of books.

atlo-axoid (at'lō-ak'soid), a. In anat., of or pertaining to the atlas and axis, the first and second cervical vertebrae.—Atlo-axoid ligament, one of three ligaments, anterior, lateral, and posterior, connected with both the axis and the atlas.

atloid (at'lōid), a. [atlas, 3, + -oid] In anat., of or pertaining to the atlas, atlantal usually as the second element of a compound as, occipito-atloid ligaments.

atmidometer (at-mī-dōm'e-tēr), n. [Gr. ἀτμός (atmós), vapor (< ἀτμός, steam, vapor), + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument invented by Babinet for measuring the evaporation from water, ice, or snow. E. H. Knight. See atmometer.

atmo- [Gr. ἀτμός, vapor, steam (= Skt. ātman, breath, = AS. æthm = OS. āthm = OFries. ēthma = D. adem = OHG. adum, ātum, MHd. atum, aten, G. atem, athem, odem, also (prop. dial.) oden, breath), perhaps from the root repr. by Skt. √ā, Gr. ἀναι (√Fa), blow, and so related to app., air, asthma, asthma, etc., and to E. wind? see air, asthma, and wind?] The first element, meaning vapor, in some compound words of Greek origin.

atmological (at-mō-lōj'i-kal), a. [atmology + -ical] Pertaining to atmology.

A classification of clouds can then only be consistent and intelligible when it rests on their atmological conditions. Whewell, Hist. Induct. Sciences, x, 2.

atmologist (at-mō-lōj'ist), n. [atmology + -ist] One skilled in atmology, a student of atmology.

The atmologists of the last century. Whewell, Nov. Org. Renovatum, III ix § 8.

atmology (at-mō-lōj'i), n. [Gr. ἀτμός, steam, vapor, + -λογία, < λέγω, speak, see -ology] That branch of science which treats of the laws and phenomena of aqueous vapor.

The relations of heat and moisture give rise to another extensive collection of laws and principles, which I shall treat of in connection with the mechanics, and shall term atmology. Whewell, Hist. Induct. Sciences, x, 1.

atmolytation, etc. See atmolyzation, etc.

atmolytic (at-mō-līz'is), n. [Gr. ἀτμός, vapor, + λύσις, a loosing, < λύω, loose.] A method of separating mixed gases or vapors of unequal diffusibility by confining the mixture in a vessel of porous material, such as graphite, placed in a vacuum. See atmolyzer. This method was first made known in 1863 by its discoverer, Professor T. Graham, master of the English mint.

atmolyzation (at-mō-lī-zā'shon), n. The separation of mixed gases by atmolytic. Also atmolytation.

atmolyze (at-mō-līz), v. t., pret. and pp. atmolyzed, ppr. atmolyzing. [atmolytic. Cf. analyze, < analysis.] To separate, as gases or vapors, by atmolytic. Also atmolyse.

atmolyzer (at-mō-lī-zēr), n. An instrument for separating gases. It consists of a porous pipe surrounded by an air-tight cylinder connected with an aspirator, the lighter gases passing through the pores of the pipe the heavier remaining in it. Also atmolyser.

atmometer (at-mōm'e-tēr), n. [Gr. ἀτμός, vapor, + μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument, invented by Sir John Leslie, for measuring the amount of evaporation from a humid surface in a given time; an evaporimeter. It consists of a thin hollow ball of porous earthenware, to which is joined a graduated glass tube. The ball and the tube are filled with water, the top of the tube is closed, and the instrument is exposed to the free action of the air. As the water transpires through the porous substance, and is removed in the form of vapor by the air, the extent of evaporation is shown by the sinking of the water in the graduated tube.

atmosphere (at'mos-fēr), n. [= F. atmosphère = Pg. atmosfera = Sp. atmósfera = It. atmosfera = Sw. atmosfär = Dan. atmosfære = G. Atmosphäre, < NL. atmosphaera, < Gr. ἀτμός, vapor, + σφαῖρα, sphere, see sphere.] 1. The æthereal fluid which surrounds the earth, and extends to an undetermined height above its surface, the air. It is a mechanical mixture of 79 parts by volume of nitrogen and 21 of oxygen, with nearly one per cent of argon, a trace of carbon dioxide and a variable quantity of aqueous vapor, ammonia, ozone, and organic matter. The composition of the normal atmosphere varies but slightly in different localities, although near towns it usually contains impurities, such as sulphuric acid, hydrochloric acid, etc. The movements of the atmosphere constitute the winds, and in it are formed or produced clouds, rain, and snow. Its density is greatest at the earth's surface, and it decreases as the height above the earth increases. The atmosphere, like other bodies, gravitates toward the earth, and therefore has weight and exerts pressure. Its average weight at the level of the sea is about 15 pounds (14.7) to the square inch.

2. A conventional unit of atmospheric pressure. An atmosphere is in English use the pressure of a vertical column of 30 inches of mercury at the freezing point at London, in French use it is the pressure of 760 millimeters of mercury at the freezing point at Paris. For the absolute atmosphere in the C. G. S. (centimeter-gram-second) system, see absolute. The weight of the atmosphere to the square inch is commonly employed as a convenient unit for pressures arising from other causes such as the weight of liquids, the force of steam, etc. Thus, a pressure in a steam boiler of 3 atmospheres means a pressure equal to 45 pounds per square inch.

The apparatus was of great simplicity, all of glass, capable of resisting the pressure of many atmospheres. Science, VIII, 58.

3. The gaseous envelop surrounding any of the heavenly bodies.

No sound either loud or soft could be heard by any inhabitant of the moon, because the moon practically has no atmosphere. J. N. Lockyer, Spect. Anal., p. 22.

4. Any gaseous medium.

For an atmosphere of any gas at uniform temperature, the height at which the density would be halved is the height of the homogeneous atmosphere for that gas multiplied by 69316. The gas is assumed to obey Boyle's law. J. D. Everett, Units and Phys. Const., p. 41.

5. An assumed outer envelop of force, effluvia, etc., surrounding a body, as, an electrical atmosphere.—6. Figuratively, intellectual or moral environment, pervading influence.

By the hearth the children sit Cold in that atmosphere of death.

Absolute atmosphere. See absolute.—Electric atmosphere. See electric aura, undul. aura.

atmospheric (at-mos-fēr'ik), a. [atmosphere + -ic Cf. spherical.] 1. Pertaining to, existing in, or consisting of the atmosphere, as, atmospheric air or vapors.

Quarantine cannot keep out an atmospheric disease. Coleridge, Table Talk.

2. Dependent on the atmosphere.

I am an atmospheric creature. Pope.

3. Caused, produced, or operated on by the atmosphere, as, rust is an atmospheric effect.—Atmospheric churn, a churn of various forms, in which atmospheric air is driven into the milk in order to agitate it, and also in order to obtain the specific effect of the air upon the milk in aggregating the oleaginous globules.—Atmospheric current. See current.—Atmospheric engine, a variety of steam engine in which the steam is admitted only to the under side of the piston and for the up stroke, the down stroke being effected by the pressure of the atmosphere caused by the formation of a vacuum under the piston through the condensation of the steam. This engine, invented by Papin in 1696, was first made a practical success by Newcomen, and was subsequently greatly improved by Watt, through the addition of a separate condenser and air pump.—Atmospheric governor, an apparatus for controlling the movements of machinery by the use of air under pressure.—Atmospheric hammer. (a) A hammer driven by means of compressed air, as the steam hammer is operated by steam. See steam hammer. (b) A hammer in which an atmospheric spring is employed. The hammer head is connected by a rod with a piston working in a cylinder to which air is admitted at the center of its length. A reciprocating motion is given to the cylinder, and by means of the air confined between its other end and the piston a corresponding motion is given to the piston head connected with it.—Atmospheric line. (a) In a diagram of steam pressure, a line drawn by the pencil when the steam is shut off from the piston of the indicator, and thus under the pressure of the atmosphere alone. The height of the steam line above this shows the pressure of the steam, and the depth of the vacuum line below shows the degree of condensation which is then taking place in the engine. (b) At. Dark lines in the solar spectrum produced by the absorption of part of the solar radiation by the terrestrial atmosphere. See spectrum.

In addition to the lines of Fraunhofer indubitably belonging to the sun, there are many other dark lines in the solar spectrum which originate from the absorptive action of the terrestrial atmosphere, and are therefore called atmospheric lines. Lommel, Light (trans.), p. 166.

Atmospheric pressure. See atmosphere, 2.—Atmospheric pump, a pump in which the water is forced into the suction pipe by atmospheric pressure.—Atmospheric railway, a railway so constructed that the motive power is derived from the pressure of the atmosphere acting on a piston working in a continuous iron tube of uniform bore laid from one place to another, the pressure being created by exhausting the air from that end of the tube toward which it is desired that the piston should advance, or by forcing in air behind it or by both methods at once. The system has not been found suitable for the ordinary purposes of a railway though it is successfully worked for the conveyance of letters, telegrams, and light packages. See pneumatic dispatch, under pneumatic.—Atmospheric spring, a spring formed by the elasticity of a confined body of air.—Atmospheric stamp, a stamp operated in the same manner as an atmospheric hammer (which see, above).—Atmospheric tides, diurnal oscillations of the atmosphere produced by the attractions of the sun and moon like the tides of the ocean, and indicated by minute variations of pressure on the barometer.

atmospherical (at-mos-fēr'i-kal), a. Same as atmospheric.

atmospherically (at-mos-fēr'i-kal-i), adv. As, or as regards, the atmosphere, by atmospheric force or influence.

atmostea, n. Plural of atmosteon.

atmosteal (at-mos-tē'al), a. [atmosteon + -al] Pertaining to an atmosteon, pneumatic, as a bone.

atmosteon (at-mos-tē'on), n.; pl. atmostea (-ē). [NL., < Gr. ἀτμός, air, + στέον, bone.] In ornith., an air-bone, a scleroskeletal ossification of a membranous tube or canal conveying air into the interior of a bone of a bird.

The siphon like tube which conveys air from the outer ear passage to the hollow of the mandible may easily, resulting in a neat tubular "air bone" or atmosteon. Conz, Key to N. A. Birds, p. 168.

atocha-grass (a-tō'chī-grās), n. [Sp. atocha, osparto-grass.] A name sometimes given to the esparto-grass, Stipa tenacissima.

atok (a-tok'), n. [Peruv.] The native name of a kind of skunk, of the genus Onepatus, found in Peru, originally described by Humboldt as Gulo guttatus. Also called zorro.

atoll (a-tol' or at'ol), n. [Formerly atollon, the name of such islands in the Maldivé group, prob. < Malayalam adal, closing, uniting (Yule).] A coral island, consisting of a strip or ring of coral surrounding a central lagoon. Such islands are very common in the Pacific ocean. They often present an exceedingly picturesque appearance, a comparatively narrow strip of coral rock thinly coated with soil, and covered with a vigorous growth of coconut, pandanus, and breadfruit trees, including a large still sheet of water, usually of considerable depth, and often well supplied with fish. The circle of coral is sometimes complete, showing no apparent communication between the enclosed lagoon and the surrounding sea, but generally it is interrupted, and presents one or more openings suitable for the passage of boats.

atollant, n. See atoll.

atom (at'om), n. [Early mod. E. also atomo, atom (and as l. atomus, atomos, with pl. atomi, sometimes atome, > E. sing. atomi, atomy, q. v.), < ME. atome, atome, < F. atome = Sp. átomo = It. átomo = G. Dan. Sw. atom, < L. atomus, < Gr. ἄτομος, an atom, prop. adj., indivisible, that cannot be cut, < a- priv + τομή, verbal adj. of τέμνω, temno, cut, see to.] 1. An extremely minute particle of matter: a term used generally with certain philosophic or scientific limitations. (a) A hypothetical particle of matter so minute as to admit of no division, an ultimate indivisible particle of matter. See atomus philosophy, under atomus. No atoms casually together hurl'd Could ever produce so beautiful a world.

Dryden, Epistles, i, 91.

(b) A particle of matter assumed not to be divided under the circumstances considered, a molecule.

An atom means something which is not divided in certain cases that we are considering.

W. K. Clifford, Lectures, I, 186.

(c) In chem. and physics, the unit of matter, the smallest mass of an element that exists in any molecule. The number of kinds of atoms is the same as the number of the elements. All atoms of the same element have the same constant weight. They are for the most part combined with other atoms, either of the same or of a different kind, forming molecules, and are indivisible by chemical force. The atom is sometimes called the chemical unit, in distinction from the molecule or physical unit, the latter being the smallest particle of any kind of matter which can exhibit all the properties of that matter, but atom is also sometimes used as synonymous with molecule in this sense.

Hence—2 Anything extremely small, a minute quantity, as, he has not an atom of sense.—3† The smallest division of time, equal to about $\frac{1}{4}$ of a second.—4 Anything indivisible, an individual. Syn Molecule etc. See particle. atom† (at'om), v t [< atom, n] To reduce to atoms, atomize.

And atom d' minds turn instantly to hail

atomic (at-o-mat'ik), a [< atom + -atic] Same as atomic.

atomic (a tom'ik), a [< atom + -ic, = F atomique] 1 Pertaining to atoms, consisting of atoms.

W. K. East, Hist. Scientific Ideas

If all be atoms, how then should the gods,

Being atoms, not be dissoluble,

2 Extremely minute. Atomic or molecular heats of bodies, the product of the specific heats of bodies into their atomic weights. These products are nearly the same for all elementary bodies, and in compounds of like atomic composition, though the products of the specific heats into the atomic weights may differ in different classes of compounds. Atomic or atomistic philosophy, a system of philosophy, founded by Leucippus and Democritus, which taught that the ultimate constituents of all things are indivisible particles or atoms, which differ from one another in form and position, whether also in quality of material was disputed among the atomists. From the diverse combination and motions of these atoms all things, including the soul, were supposed to arise. The atomistic philosophy was perfected in its details by the Epicureans, particularly by Lucretius, and was the first complete system of materialism. It is the basis of the modern physical atomic theory, but, apart from the numerous special modifications which the progress of modern science has rendered necessary, it differs from it essentially in this, that the ancient atomism was a philosophy of the universe, while modern atomism is, primarily at least, merely a physical theory of the inner structure of matter, constructed for the convenience of physical research. Atomic theory, or doctrine of definite proportions, in chem., the hypothesis that all chemical combinations take place between the ultimate particles or atoms of bodies, and that these unite either atom with atom or in proportions expressed by some simple multiple of the number of atoms.—Atomic volume, in chem., the space occupied by a quantity of an element in the solid state proportional to its atomic weight, and expressed by the quotient of the specific gravity divided by the atomic weight.—Atomic weight, in chem., the number expressing the relative weight of one atom of an element compared with the weight of some unit, usually that of the hydrogen atom, which is the lightest at present known. The atomic weights of the other elements, therefore, express how many times the atoms of these elements are heavier than the atom of hydrogen. See element.

atomical (a tom'ik-al), a Same as atomic.

atomically (a tom'ik-al-i), adv In an atomic manner, from an atomic point of view, regarded as an atom, or as made up of atoms.

atomician (at-o-mish'an), n [< atom + -ian] An adherent of the atomic philosophy or theory. See atomic.

atomicism† (a tom'ik-sizm), n [< atomic + -ism] Atomism.

atomicity (at-o-mis'i-ti), n [< atomic + -ity] In chem., same as equivalency and quantivalence.

The number of bonds possessed by an element, or its atomicity, is apparently, at least, not a fixed and invariable quantity. E. Frankland, Expt. in Chem., p. 9 atomisation, etc. See atomization, etc.

atomism (at'om-izm), n [< atom + -ism, = F atomisme = Sp. Pg. It. atomismo] 1 The metaphysical or the physical theory of atoms; atomic philosophy or atomic theory. See atomic.

Atomism also is incommensurable for this supposes atoms, minima, extended but indivisible.

Sir W. Hamilton, Metaphys., II 528, App.

The result of atomism in any form, dealing with any subject, is that the principle of uniformity is hunted down into the elements of things. It is resolved into the uniformity of these elements or atoms, and of the relations of those which are next to each other.

W. K. Clifford, Lectures, II 139

2 The state of existing as an atom or a unit, or of being composed of atoms or units, individualism.

atomist (at'om-ist), n and a [< atom + -ist, = F atomiste = Sp. Pg. It. atomista] 1 n One who holds to or expounds the atomic philosophy or the atomic theory.

II. a. Same as atomistic.

The more closely we follow the atomist doctrine to its starting point and spread before us the necessary outfit for its journey of deduction, the larger do its demands appear.

J. Martineau, Materialism

atomistic (at-o-mis'tik), a [< atomist + -ic] 1 Pertaining to atomism or the atomists.

Coleridge, Friend, I 121

2. Consisting of atoms—Atomistic philosophy. See atomic philosophy, under atomic.

atomistical (at-o-mis'ti-kal), a Same as atomistic.

atomistically (at-o-mis'ti-kal-i), adv In an atomistic manner, as composed of distinct atoms.

atomization (at'om-i-zā'shon), n. [< atomize + -ation] The process of atomizing or the state of being atomized, specifically, in mod., the reduction of liquids to the form of spray for inhalation or for application to the throat or nasal passages, and for other purposes. Also spelled atomisation.

atomize (at'om-iz), v.; pret and pp atomized, ppr atomizing [< atom + -ize] 1. trans To speculate respecting atoms. Cudworth.

II. trans To reduce to atoms, reduce to very small particles, as a liquid, spray.

Also spelled atomise.

atomizer (at'om-i-zér), n One who or that which atomizes or reduces to atoms or very small particles, specifically, an apparatus designed to reduce a liquid to spray for disinfecting, cooling, perfuming, medicinal, and other purposes. Also spelled atomiser.

atomology (at-o-mol'ō-jī), n [*< Gr. átomos, atom, + -λογία, lógos, speak* see -ology] The metaphysical doctrine of atoms. See atomic.

3 In theol., the reconciliation of God and man by means of the life, sufferings, and death of Christ.

For God was in Christ, and made agreement betwene the world, and hym self, and imputed not their synnes vnto them, and hath committed to vs the preaching of the atonement

Tyndale, 2 Cor. v 19

When we were enemies we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son, we also joy in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom we have now received the atonement

Rom. v 10, 11

This doctrine assumes that sin has made a spiritual separation between God and the human soul. Different systems of theology explain differently the method of reconciliation, and therefore use the word atonement with different meanings. The early fathers generally stated the doctrine in the terms of reparation, and it was not until the time of the Reformation that the differences in philosophical statement were clearly marked. The modern statements may be grouped under four general heads, as follows: (a) A reparation or satisfaction for sin made by the sufferings of Christ as a substitute for the sinner, and in lieu of the punishment to which the sinner was justly amenable. Such satisfaction is regarded as necessary either (1) to satisfy the justice of God, and so make for forgiveness possible, or (2) to satisfy the law of God, produce the public impression which punishment would have produced, and so make forgiveness safe. The former is known as the satisfaction, the latter as the governmental theory.

The word atonement, in its original sense, always denotes some amends, or satisfaction, for the neglect of some duty, or the commission of some fault, a satisfaction with which, when supposed to be complete, the person injured ought reasonably to be contented, and to demand of the offender nothing more on account of his transgression.

Taking the term atonement in its technical signification to denote the satisfaction of divine justice for the sin of man, by the substituted penal sufferings of the Son of God, we shall find a slower scientific unfolding of this great cardinal doctrine than of any other of the principal truths of Christianity.

Shedd, Hist. Christian Doctrine, v 1

(b) The entrance of God into humanity, that he may thereby drive out sin and make the human race at one with himself.

Supposing the Father's will to be a will to all good, the Son of God, being one with him, and Lord of man, to obey and fulfil in our flesh that will by entering into the lowest condition into which man had fallen through their sin, this Man to be, for this reason, an object of continual complacency to his Father, and that complacency to be fully drawn out by the death of the cross.—his death to be a sacrifice, the only complete sacrifice ever offered, the entire surrender of the whole spirit and body to God, is not this in the highest sense atonement? Is not the true root of humanity revealed? Is not God in him reconciled to man? Maurice, Theol. Essays.

It [the new theology] holds to the atonement as a divine act and process of ethical and practical import—not as a mystery of the distant heavens and isolated from the struggle of the world, but a comprehensible force in the actual redemption of the world from its evil.

T. T. Munger, The Freedom of Faith

The majority of orthodox divines, whether in the Roman Catholic or the Protestant churches, ordinarily hold one of the above views or a combination formed from them. In general, the former opinion (a) is held in the Calvinistic school of theology, the latter opinion (b) in the more modern Broad Church school. (c) In Unitarian theology, the moral result produced by the influence exerted on mankind by the life and death of Christ leading men to repentance and to God. This is sometimes known as the moral influence theory of the atonement.

Even though we should reject all the Orthodox theories about atonement, we may accept the fact. We can believe that God in Christ does reconcile the world to him self,—does create a sense of pardoned sin,—does remove the weight of transgression,—does take away the obstacle in our conscience,—does help us into a living faith, hope, peace, joy.

J. F. Clarke, Orthodoxy, p. 250

(d) In New Church (Swedenborgian) theology, the union and accord of flesh and spirit in man, and so the union and accord of man with God by a spiritual change wrought in the individual.

This is what is understood in the New Church by the atonement, or at one ment, a bringing at one of the human and the divine, or, as the apostle says, "making in himself of twain one new man." And the purpose of this atonement was, that the Lord might ever be able to bring our external or natural at one with our internal or spiritual man—goodness at one with truth in our minds,—and so bring us into complete spiritual union or at one ment with himself.

B. F. Barrett, Doctrine of the New Church

Doctrine of blood atonement, the doctrine, attributed to the Mormon Church, that the killing of an apostate or of one in danger of apostasy is a deed of love, since it makes atonement for the sin of apostasy, and so makes possible God's forgiveness of it.

atoner (a-tō'nér), n. One who makes atonement.

atria, n. Plural of atrium.

atrial (ā'tri-āl), a [< atrium + -al.] Of or pertaining to an atrium. — Atrial aperture, opening, or orifice, the communication of the atrial cavity with the exterior. It forms one of the two apertures (the other being the oral) with which ascidians or sea squirts are provided, and through which water may be squirted by the contraction of the muscular walls of the body. See cuts under Appendicularia, Doliolidae, and Tunicata. — Atrial canal, the cavity of an atrium.

Each stigma leads into a funnel shaped atrial canal. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 512

Atrial membrane, the third tunic of ascidians, a delicate membrane of two layers, parietal and visceral, like a peritonium, lining the atrium.

The atrial membrane forms a bilobed sac, one lobe extending on each side of the pharynx, and opens outward by the atrial aperture. It communicates by the stigmata with the interior of the branchial sac, and, by the anal and genital openings, it receives the feces and genital products. Huxley, Anat. Invert., p. 517

Atricha (at'ri-kā), n. pl. [NL, < (Gr. ἀτρίχες, poet. for ἀτρίς, without hair, < a- priv + τρίχες (τρίχες), hair).] 1 A division of the Nematophora, containing those forms which are devoid of cilia, as the genus Echinoderis. They are distinguished from Gastrophysa, which are ciliated on the ventral surface of the body.

2 A name given to certain protozoans, or lobose rhizopods having no permanent processes an inexact synonym of Amoeboida.

Atrichia (a-trī'ki-ā), n. [NL, < (Gr. ἀτρίχες, poet. for ἀτρίς, without hair see Atricha).] 1 The typical and only genus of the family Atrichidae. A. clamosa is the scrub-bird of Australia. J. Gould, 1844. Also called Atrichornis. —2 A genus of dipterous insects.

Atrichidae (at-ri-kī'ā-dē), n. pl. [NL, < Atrichia, 1, + -idae.] A remarkable family of anomalous oscine passerine birds, forming with Mniotilta one of the major groups of birds, Passeres abnormales. It contains the Australian scrub birds of the genus Atrichia, which have the syrinx differently constructed from that of normal oscines. Also called Atrichornithidae.

Atrichornis (at-ri-kōr'nīs), n. [NL, < (Gr. ἀτρίχες, without hair (see Atricha), + ορνίς, a bird).] Same as Atrichia, 1.

atrichosis (at-ri-kō'si-s), n. [< Gr. ἀτρίχος, without hair (see Atricha), + -osis.] In pathol., failure to develop hair.

atrioventricular (ā'tri-ō-ven-trik'ū-lār), a [< atrium, 3, + ventricular.] Pertaining to the atrial, or auricular, and ventricular cavities of the heart as, the atrioventricular valve

tant and usually the most splendid apartment of the house. At an early period, and later among the poor, the atrium was used not only as a ceremonial room, but as a reception room and for general domestic purposes, as cooking and dining. In it were placed the ancestral images and heirlooms, the marriage couch, the focus or hearth, and generally a small altar. Later, among the wealthy, and when separate apartments were built for kitchen and dining room, a chapel, or the larar, etc., it was reserved as a general reception and show room. It was lighted by an opening in the roof called the compluvium, toward which the roof sloped, so as to conduct the rain water into a cistern in the floor, called the impluvium. 2 A hall or court resembling in arrangement an atrium proper, as at the entrance of some classical or early Christian public buildings, etc.—3 [NL] In anat, an auricle of the heart, or some equivalent venous cardiac cavity

2† Very grievous; violent as, atrocious distempers.—3 Very bad, execrable as, an atrocious pun [Colloq]—Syn 1 Wicked, Scandalous, Shocking, Flagrant, Heinous, Infamous, Outrageous, Atrocious, Monstrous, horrible, villainous, flagitious, diabolical, agree in expressing great and intentional badness, calling for strong abhorrence. Because they are used with feeling, the recognition of their difference is not all ways practicable. Flagrant and heinous are hardly applicable to persons, the others apply to persons or things

Wicked is the generic word, and is the lightest where all are strong, it is the one that is most common in a playful use, yet it is at times an intense word, as forcible as any of the others, though less definite. Scandalous means offensive to decency, and so disgraceful. That which is shocking, literally, gives a sudden and heavy blow, and hence produces a corresponding feeling of horror or disgust, or both. That which is flagrant, literally, flames into notice, and hence is glaring, striking, and so notorious, enormous in badness. Heinous means hateful, and hence aggravated. That which is infamous is worthy of a total loss of reputation, and hence has a reputation or character of the worst kind, especially for baseness. Outrageous means attended with outrage, doing outrage, especially outraging decency, going beyond all bounds, like the acts of a madman. Atrocious is primarily fierce or cruel, savage, bloody, and wicked, enormously wicked, hence violating the first principles of humanity or of human nature. That which is monstrous is so bad as to be out of the course of nature, a prodigy or miracle of badness. See abandoned, criminal, irreligious, and nefarious attachment (a-tach'ment), n [ME attachment (in sense 1), < attachen, attach, in other senses < F attachement, < attacher see attach]

1 The act of attaching, specifically, in law, a taking of the person, goods, or estate by a writ or precept in a civil action, to secure a debt or demand, or to compel to appear in court, or to punish for contempt. In American usage attachment when used in reference to property means the taking of the defendant's property into custody by the law, by a summary process from a court, in advance of the trial of the merits of the case, as security for the payment of any judgment that may be recovered. The grounds of granting it are usually evidence of fraud or fraudulent disposal of property or apprehension of absconding, etc. When used in reference to the person it means the taking of the person into custody to answer to a charge of contempt of court. Foreign attachment is the taking, from the hands or control of a third person within the jurisdiction, of the money or goods or rights of action of a debtor who is not within the jurisdiction. Any person who has goods or effects of a debtor is considered in law as the agent, attorney, factor or trustee of the debtor, and an attachment served on such person binds the property in his hands to respond to the judgment against the debtor. The process of foreign attachment has existed from time immemorial in London, Bristol, Exeter, Lancaster and some other towns in England, and by the Common Law Procedure Act of 1854 has been made general. It is also sometimes known as garnishment, in Scotland as arrestment and in New England as trustee process

2 The writ or process directing the person or estate of a person to be taken, for the purposes above stated — 3 The act or state of being attached, fastened on, or connected — 4 Close adherence or affection, regard, any passion or affection that binds a person to another person or to a thing toward one another, according to their distance. Such attraction is a mutual action which in some form all bodies, whether at rest or in motion, exert upon one another. The attractive force, with which the atoms of different bodies in certain cases tend to unite, so as to form a new body or bodies, is called chemical affinity, that which binds together the molecules of the same body is called cohesion. Those of different bodies adhesion. Connected with the last-named forces is capillary attraction, by which liquids tend to rise in fine tubes or small incisions of porous bodies. In all the cases mentioned the forces act only through very small distances. When bodies tend to come together from sensible distances, the force being directly proportional to the square of the distance between them, the attraction is called gravitation, as when the earth attracts and is attracted by a falling body, or attracts and is attracted by the moon, etc., or magnetism, as when exerted between the unlike poles of a magnet, or electricity, as when dissimilarly electrified bodies attract one another. See capillary, chemical, cohesion, electricity, gravitation, magnetism. (b) The power or act of alluring, winning, or engaging, allurements, enticement, as, the attractions of beauty or eloquence.

Setting the attraction of my good parts aside, I have no other charms. Shak, M. W. of W., II, 2.

2 That which attracts feeling or desire, a charm, an allurements.

She, questionless, with her sweet harmony
And other chosen attractions, would allure. Shak, Pericles, v, 1.

It is probable that pollen was aboriginally the sole attraction to insects.

Darwin, Cross and Self Fertilization, p. 402.

attractively (a-trak'-shon-nl-), adv By means of attraction.

The American, VI, 172.

attractive (a-trak'-tiv), a and n [= F attractif, -ive, = It attrattivo, < L as if attractivus*, see attract and -ive] 1 a 1† Having the power or faculty of drawing in, to, or toward by mechanical agency or action. — 2 Having the quality of attracting by inherent force, causing to gravitate to or toward as, the attractive force of bodies.

A repulsive force is positive, an attractive, which diminishes the distance between two masses is negative.

A. Denoll, Prin. of Physics, p. 108.

3 Having the power of charming or alluring by agreeable qualities, inviting, engaging, enticing.

For contemplation he and valour form'd,
For softness she and sweet attractive grace. Milton, P. 1, v, 298.

For he is one of those attractive faces
That when you gaze upon them, never fall
To bid you look again. Hallack, Fanny.

II † n That which draws or entices, allurements, charm.

The dressing
Is a most main attractive. B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, III, 2.

The gospel speaks nothing but attractions and invitations. South, Sermons.

attractively (a-trak'-tiv-h), adv In an attractive manner, with the power of attracting or drawing to as, to smile attractively.

attractiveness (a-trak'-tiv-nēs), n The quality of being attractive or engaging.

The same attractiveness in riches. South, Sermons, VII, 115.

attractor, n See attracter.

attrahens (at'-ru-henz), ppr, used also as n, pl attrahentes (at'-ru-hen-tēz) [NL, < L attrahens, ppr see attract] In anat., drawing forward, or that which draws forward, attrahent the opposite of retrahens (chiefly in the phrase attrahens aurem, the name of a small muscle whose action tends to draw the ear forward).

attrahent (at'-ra-hent), a and n [= L attrahent (t-s), ppr of attrahere, attract see attract] 1. a 1 Drawing to, attracting. — 2 In anat., same as attrahens.

atrap† (a-trap'), v t. [= at-2 + trap†, v.] To furnish with trappings, deck.

For all his armour was like salvage weed
With woody moss be dight, and all his steed
With oaken leaves atrap. Spenser, F. Q., IV, iv, 80.

attractation (at-tek-tā'-shon), n [= L attractatio (n-), < attractare, handle, pp attractatus, < ad, to, + tractare, handle, freq. of trahere, pp tractus, draw (cf attract)] A touching, a handling, frequent manipulation.

attributable (a-trib'-u-tā-bl), a [= F attribuable, < trib + -able] Capable of being or liable to be ascribed, imputed, or attributed, ascribable, imputable, as, the fault is not attributable to the author.

Hibernation, although a result of cold, is not its immediate consequence, but is attributable to that deprivation of food and other essentials which extreme cold occasions. See J. F. Pennant, Ceylon, II, 4.

attribute (a-trib'-ut), v t, pret and pp attributed, ppr attributing [= L attributus, pp of attribuere, assign, < ad, to, + tribuere, give, assign, bestow see tribute] To ascribe; impute, consider as belonging or as due, assign.

The merit of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact performer. Shak, All's Well, III, 6.

Narrow views of religion tend to attribute to God an arbitrary and capricious action, not in harmony with either science or the Bible. Dawson, Nat and the Bible, p. 17.

He does not hesitate to attribute the disease from which they suffered to those depressing moral influences to which they were subjected. See H. Holmes, Old Vine of Life, p. 2.

The burning of New York was generally attributed to New England incendiaries. Locke, Eng. Intell., cent, xlv.

— Syn. Attribute. Ascribe. Impute. Charge, have two meanings in common: they may assign some attribute, quality, or appurtenance to a person or thing, or they may connect different things as an effect with its cause. Ascribe is the weakest. Attribute is stronger, as to attribute one substance to God, to attribute failure to incompetence, ascribe being most manifestly figurative, is the strongest and most common, it is rarely used in a bad sense. That which is imputed in the first sense named is generally but not always bad, as to impute folly to a man, to impute anything good seems an archaic mode of expression. Impute is not very common in the second sense, as to impute one's troubles to one's follies. The theological meaning of impute, that of laying to a person's account some thing good or bad that does not belong to him, has affected but little the popular use of the word. That which is charged, in either of the senses named is bad, as His angels he charged with folly. John, 18. I charged it to their youth and inexperience. The word is a strong one, on account of its connection with legal processes, etc.

The singular excellence to which eloquence attained at Athens is to be mainly attributed to the influence which it exerted there. Macaulay, Athenian Orators.

I have never yet encountered that bitter spirit of bigotry which is so frequently ascribed to Mohammedans. B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 24.

The salts, predominant in quick lime, we refer rather to fixative than acid. Bowd, Colours.

I do not think that what I have said may not be imputed to the colonies. I am a private person and do not write by their direction. Franklin, Life, p. 87.

What you have charged me with that have I done, And more much more. Shak, Lea, v, 1.

attribute (at'-ri-but), n [= L attributum, predicate, attribute, lit what is ascribed, noun of attributus, pp of attribuere, ascribe, attribute see attribute, v] 1 In logic, that which is predicated or affirmed of a subject, a predicate, an accident.

A predicate, the exact limits of which are not determined cannot be used to define and determine a subject. It may be called an attribute, and convey not the whole nature of the subject, but some one quality belonging to it. Abp, The Union, Laws of Thought, p. 120.

The term attribute simply directs the attention to the fact that we attribute to, or affirm of, a being something, that we distinguish from itself. A. For, Human Intellect, § 642.

2 A character inseparable from its subject.

By this word attribute is meant something, which is immovable and inseparable from the essence of its subject, as that which constitutes it, and which is thus opposed to mode. Descartes.

Some necessary marks belong to things as reasons of other marks of the same things others as consequences of other marks. The latter are called attributes. Kant.

3 A characteristic or distinguishing mark, especially, an excellent or lofty quality or trait as, wisdom and goodness are his attributes.

See with him the mortal Venus, the heart blood of beauty, love's invisible soul. Pan, Who, my cousin's, Crusades.

See No, an, Helen could you not find out that by her attributes? Shak, I and C, III, 1.

The term attribute is a word properly convertible with quality for every quality is an attribute, and every attribute is a quality, but custom has introduced a certain distinction in their application. Attribute is considered as a word of loftier significance, and is, therefore, conventionally limited to qualities of a higher application. Thus, for example, it would be as ridiculous to speak of the qualities of God, and as ridiculous to talk of the attributes of matter. Sir W. Hamilton, Metaph, I, 151.

The ladder is a striking attribute for the patriarch Jacob and the harp for King David. Fausholt.

Paraphernalia is recognized by the lofty medals or coin measure, on her head the attribute of the Ethiopian deities. C. F. Arcton, Art and Archaeol, p. 87.

5† Reputation, honor.

Much attribute he hath, and much the reason Why we ascribe it to him. Shak, I and C, II, 3.

6 In gram., an attributive word; a word denoting an attribute. Symbolical attributes. See symbolical. — Syn 1-3 Property, characteristic, etc. See quality.

attribution (at-ri-bū'-shon), n [= F attribution, < L attributio (n-), < attribuere, attribute see attribute, v] 1 The act of attributing, in any sense, ascription.

His [God's] relative personality belshadowed forth by the attribution to him of love, anger, and other human feelings and sentiments. Dawson, Orig. of World, p. 12.

2 That which is ascribed, attribute.

If speaking truth,
In this fine age were not thought flattery,
Such attribution should the Douglas have,
As not a soldier of this season's stamp
Should go so general current through the world. Shak, I Hen IV, iv, 1.

3 Authority or function granted, as to a ruler, minister, or court.

It is not desirable that to the ever growing attributions of the government so delicate a function should be superadded. I. S. Mill.

attributive (a-trib'-u-tiv), a and n [= F attributif, < L as if attributus*, < attribuere see attribute] 1 a 1 Pertaining to or having the character of attribution, as, the attributive use or relation of certain words, attributive qualities or insignia, an attributive judgment (in logic). — 2 In gram., pertaining to or expressing an attribute, used (as a word) in direct description without predication, as, a bad pen, a burning house, a ruined man. An attributive word is to be distinguished from a predicate, as, the pen is bad, the man is ruined, and from an apponitive, as the pen bad as it is might be worse, this man, ruined by another sense of the word, is inferior. All adjective words, as proper adjectives, adjective pronouns, and participles may be used attributively, also nouns, as, a precious table, a gold ring, my humble friend, the young soldier boy. The relation of an adjective to the adjective qualified by it is also by some called attributive.

II. n In gram., a word expressing an attribute, an adjective, or a phrase or clause performing the function of an adjective, which describes a noun without being part of the ascription or predication made about it.

attributively (a-trib'-u-tiv-h), adv In an attributive manner, specifically, in gram., as attribute or attributive, in direct ascription of quality or circumstance without predication.

attrist (a-trist'), v t [= F attrister, sudden, < a (< L ad, to) + triste, < L tristis, sad] To grieve, sadden.

How then could I write when it was impossible but to attrist you! when I could speak of nothing but unpurged horrors. Waldpole, Letters, IV, 525.

atrite (a-rit'), a [= L atritus, pp of atritare, rub away, wear, < ad, to, + trere, rub see trite] 1† Worn by rubbing or friction. Milton. — 2 In theol., imperfectly contrite or repentant. See attrition, 3.

It that was attrite being, by virtue of this [the priest's] absolution made contrite and justified. Abp, Ussher, Ans. to a Jesuit, v.

attriteness (a-rit'-nēs), n The state of being attrite, the state of being much worn.

attrition (a-trish'-on), n [= F attrition, < L attritio (n-), a rubbing, < L atritus, pp of atritare, rub see atrite] 1 The rubbing of one thing against another, mutual friction, as, the abrasion of coins by attrition. — 2 The act of wearing away by rubbing, the state of being worn down or smoothed by friction, abrasion.

The change of the aliment is effected by the attrition of the inward stomach and dissolvent liquor assisted with heat. Arbuthnot, Aliments.

These were people trained by attrition with many influences. F. S. Phelps, Beyond the Gates, p. 119.

3 In theol., imperfect contrition or repentance, with real detestation of sin, and a true purpose of amendment, arising from those supernatural motives of faith which are lower than charity, or the true love of God for his own infinite perfections. Such motives are a love of justice for its own sake, the intrinsic shamefulness of sin, the fear of divine punishment, etc. Attrition admits sin only when completely forgiven by the grace conferred through sacramental absolution. See contrition.

Attrition by virtue of the keys made contrition.
Quoted in Abp. Cusher's Ans to a Jesuit v

attrition-mill (a-trish'on-mil), n A mill, usually centrifugal, in which grain is pulverized by the mutual attrition of its particles, and by frictional contact with the sides.

au¹ [< ME au, av or a before a guttural, nasal, or l (ag, ah, al (aut), etc.), of AS or OF or L origin] A common English digraph representing generally the sound of "broad a" (ā), but often also k. It occurs only exceptionally, and by conformation with Romanic analogies in words of Anglo-Saxon origin, as in ought, taught, daughter, hauin = halm, hawk = back and formerly as a variant medially, with au as in baud, hauck etc. for baunt, hauck etc. In words of Old French (and ultimately Latin) origin it represents an original au, now sometimes au as in fault, assault etc. or a before a nasal, as in auant, haunch, lauch, etc. (but in most such words now usually simplified to a, as in avant, grand lance, etc.) It is frequently of Latin origin, as in audat, caus, laud, etc. or of Greek origin, as in caus, tu. In words from recent French it may have the present h sound (as in haute, au fait, etc.) In words of German and usually of other foreign origin, it has its analytical value (a + u), corresponding to English au in mount, as in auerkant, ablaunt, auwant. Formerly au and au were used almost indifferently, but now au is never final in English words, while au is rarely medial, except in a few familiar words, as in hauck, baud but regularly final, as in tau, saw, clau, etc. See au

au² (ō) [F, < OF au, o, ou, earlier al, contr of a le = Sp Pg al = It all, allo, < L ad illum (m) or ad illud (neut) ad, to, with acc of ille, that, in Rom the def art 'the' The corresp fem is a la, q v] To the, at the, with the the dative of the French definite article, occurring in some phrases frequently used in English, as au fait, au fond, au revoir, etc.

Swift, Gulliver's Travels, IV: 10

2 Same as audient, n, 2—3 A person appointed and authorized to examine an account or accounts, compare the charges with the vouchers, examine parties and witnesses, allow or reject charges, and state the result. It is usual with courts to refer accounts involved in litigation to auditors, in some jurisdictions called referees or commissaires for adjustment, and their report, if received is the basis of the judgment. Sometimes an auditor is a standing officer of political or corporate bodies. State or municipal auditors are persons appointed or elected to examine the public accounts as they accrue or at such intervals as may be designated. In the United States government there are six auditors of the treasury. The first auditor has charge of the accounts of the civil service, customs, judiciary, public debt etc. the second those of Indian affairs and some of those of the army, the third those of the quartermaster general, engineer corps, commissary general, war claims etc. the fourth, those of the navy, the fifth those of the internal revenue office, census, patent office and state department, and the sixth, those of the post office department.

those bored by a bit or gimlet. It consists of an iron shank ending in a steel bit, and a handle placed at right angles with the shank. The augers formerly made with a straight channel or groove are called pod augers, augers of the modern form, with spiral channels, are called serpentine augers. The ordinary screw auger is forged as a paralleled blade of steel, which is twisted while red hot. The end terminates in a worm, by which the auger is gradually drawn into the work, like the gimlet. Another form is that of a cylindrical shaft, around which is brazed a single fin or rib, the end being made into a worm, and immediately behind the worm a small diameter mortise is formed for the reception of a detached cutter, which exactly resembles the chisel edge of the center bit. Expanding augers have cutters susceptible of radial adjustment for boring holes of different sizes. In the slitting auger, used for channels, mortises, etc., the cutting lips are upon the side of the auger as well as at the end, and the piece to be grooved is fed against them laterally. Mortises are cut by causing the auger to penetrate to the proper depth, and then feeding the work laterally to the required length. The two rounded ends of the mortise are then squared with a chisel. The square hole auger is an auger revolving within a rectangular tube of boring, whose lower edge is sharpened to cut away the remaining substance of the square circumscribing the round hole which the auger bores a little in advance.

2 An instrument for boring the soil. Such an instrument used in setting posts is called a post hole auger and one for ascertaining the nature of the subsoil, the presence or absence of water, etc., is called specifically an earth boring auger. Augers for the latter use are of various kinds, but they all consist of three parts namely a handle by which two or more augur (â'gur), n. [Cf ME augur, < L augur, earlier auger, of uncertain origin, perhaps < avis, a bird (cf avis and avocaption), + -gur, connected with garrere, talk, chatter] 1 Among the ancient Romans, a functionary whose duty it was to observe and to interpret, according to traditional rules, the auspices, or reputed natural signs concerning future events. These auspices were studied, with fixed ceremonial, in the following classes of phenomena (1) signs from the heavens, including thunder and lightning and other meteorological manifestations (2) signs from the direction of flight or the various cries of birds, (3) signs from the manner of eating of domestic fowls kept for this purpose, (4) signs from the movements and attitudes of animals, (5) evil omens from various fortuitous incidents such as the fall of any object, the gnawing of a mouse the creaking of a chair etc occurring during the augural ceremonies, or when these were about to begin. The official or public augurs, who constituted a college probably founded by Numa, were originally three in number. By the time of Tarquin they had been increased to six. After 300 B C the number became nine, of whom five must be patricians Sulla made the number fifteen. Julius Caesar sixteen, not including his own official membership in his character of perpetual chief priest and dictator and toward the close of the empire the number was still further increased. The augurs wore the sacerdotal praetexta, or toga with a broad purple border, and their distinctive emblem was the curved rod called the stipes, with which they marked out the limits of the templum or boundary within which the omens with which they had to do were to be observed. Before any public business or ceremony was undertaken the augurs decided whether the auspices were propitious, or whether unfavorable omens demanded interruption or delay they conducted the inauguration or exauguration of priests, temples and places, such as new settlements, and fixed the times of movable festivals. In the engraving the figure holds the stipes in his right hand, while one of the sacred fowls appears at his feet

ily instituted by Tiberius (c) A member of a private college or corporation, of which there were many in Rome and throughout the provinces, formed to do reverence, by religious ceremonies and otherwise, to the memory of Augustus, and, at a later date, to pay divine honors to the reigning emperor also The office of augustal became hereditary, and carried with it the assignment of certain public dues, and the giving to the public of stated feasts and shows The augustals wore distinctive ornaments, had places of honor in the theaters, and enjoyed other privileges (d) Under the early empire, a general name for subaltern officers

ily Alcidae and the order Pygopodes, characterized by having 3 toes, webbed feet, and short wings and tail Originally the name was specifically applied to the great auk or garefowl, Alca impennis, which became extinct about 1844, notable as the largest bird of the family and the only one deprived of the power of flight by reason of the smallness of its wings, though these were as perfectly formed as in other birds It was about 30 inches long, the length of the wing being only about 8 inches Its color was dark brown above and white below, with a large white spot before the eye It abounded on both coasts of the North Atlantic, nearly or quite to the arctic circle, and south on the American side to Massachusetts The name came to be also specifically applied to the razor-billed auk Alca or Uria lomvia, a similar but much smaller species, about 15 inches long, with a white line instead of a spot before the eye, and finally, as a book name, it was made synonymous with Alca Several North Pacific species still bear the name, as the rhinoceros auk (Cerastorhinus monocerata), the crested auk (Sinorhynchus cristatus), etc, but other special names are usually found for most of the birds of this family, as

Bacon, Nat. Hist., § 323.

6. Known or obtained by the sense of hearing as, auricular evidence — 7. Ear-shaped; auriculate, auriform as, the auricular articulating surface of the human thumb — 8. In echinoderms, of or pertaining to the auricles as, an internal auricular process — 9. Pertaining to the auricle of the heart — Anterior auricular arteries, two or more branches of the temporal artery supplying the external ear — Anterior auricular veins, small veins from the external ear emptying into the temporal vein — Auricular feathers, in ornith., the special set of feathers, usually of peculiar structure which overlie and defend the outer opening of the ear — Auricular finger, the little finger so called from the fact that it is most easily introduced into the ear — Auricular foramen, the mouth of the external auditory meatus of the ear — Auricular nerves, various small nerves derived from the great auricular, the auriculotemporal, the facial, the second cervical, the small or sometimes the large occipital, and the vagus nerves, which supply the integument and other parts of the external ear and its vicinity — Auricular point, in anat., the center of the auricular foramen — Auricular radii, in cranium, radii drawn from the projection of the auricular point on the median plane to the projections of other points of the skull. See craniometry — Auricular tube, a speaking tube, either portable for the use of deaf persons, or extending between different parts of a building for the conveyance of messages — Auricular witness, a witness who relates what he has heard — Deep auricular artery, a small branch from the internal maxillary artery, supplying the external meatus of the ear — Great auricular nerve, the auricularis magnus, a nerve arising from the second and third cervical nerves, and distributed to the external ear and adjacent parts — Posterior auricular artery, a branch of the external carotid artery, supplying parts in the region of the ear — Posterior auricular vein, a vein in which, descending behind the pinna of the ear from the side of the head, joins the external jugular vein.

II. n. 1. pl. In ornith., the auricular feathers — 2. The auricular or little finger. See auricular finger, above.

auricularia (â-rik-û-lâ-ri-a), n. [NL, < auricula, 4, + -aria] 1. [Pl. auricularia (-ê)] A term applied to an early stage of the development of the embryo of certain echinoderms, as those of the genera Holothuria, Synapta, etc., when it is ciliated. See Holothuridea. [It is a generic name given by Müller through a mistake as to the nature of these larvæ.] — 2. [cap.] In conch., a generic name variously used as, (a) by De Blainville for a genus of accephalous mollusks, (b) by Fabricius for a genus of gastropods.

auricularian (â-rik-û-lâ-ri-an), a. [auricularia + -an] Of or pertaining to an auricularia, echinopædic.

auricularly (â-rik-û-lâ-ri-lî), adv. 1. In an auricular manner, specifically, in a secret manner; by whispers.

These will soon confess, and that not auricularly, but in a loud and audible voice. Decay of Christ. Piety, vii. § 4.

2. By means of auricles.

auriculate, auriculated (â-rik-û-lât, -lâ-ted), a. [NL. auriculatus, < L. auricula see auricle] 1. Ear-shaped, like or likened to an auricle; auriform — 2. Having ears, provided with ears, auricles, or ear-like parts in bot., said of a leaf with a pair of small blunt projections or ears at the base — Auriculate antennæ, in entom., antennæ in which one of the basal joints is expanded laterally in a concave plate, as in certain aquatic beetles — Auriculate elytra, in entom., elytra produced laterally at the humeral angles into a free lobe.

auriculid (â-rik-û-lîd), n. A gastropod of the family Auriculidae.

Auriculidae (â-ri-kû-lî-dê), n. pl. [NL, < Auricula, 3, + -ida] A family of pulmonate gastropods with contractile tentacles, eyes sessile at the inner or hinder bases of the tentacles, rugose teguments, and a spiral shell whose partitions are generally absorbed, and whose columella is plicated. The family is divided into subfamilies and many genera. Some of the species frequent banks, generally within tide limits, others marshes and wet woods, and a few (of the genus Carychium) are almost exclusively terrestrial. See cut under Pythia.

auriculobregmatic (â-rik-û-lô-breg-mat'ik), a. [auricula + bregma (-t) + -ic] In anat., pertaining to the auricular point and the bregma — Auriculobregmatic line, a line drawn from the projection of the auricular point on the median plane of the skull to the bregma. See craniometry.

auriculo-orbicularis (â-rik-û-lô-ôr-bîk-û-lâ-ri-s), n. [NL, < auricula + orbicularis] A muscle of the hedgehog connecting the pinna of the ear with the orbicularis panniculi, which it antagonizes.

auriculoparotidæan (â-rik-û-lô-pâ-rô-tîd'-ê-an), a. [auricula + parotid + -ean] Pertaining to the auricle of the ear and the parotid gland specifically applied to a nerve which supplies those parts.

auriculotemporal (â-rik-û-lô-tem-pô-ra), a. [auricula + temporal] Pertaining to the ear and the temporal region specifically applied to a branch of the inferior maxillary nerve which supplies the external ear and adjacent regions.

auriculoventricular (â-rik-û-lô-ven-trîk'û-lar), a. [auricula + ventricular] Pertaining both to the auricles and to the ventricles of the heart as, the auriculoventricular orifices. See cut under heart — Auriculoventricular valves. See valve.

auriferous (â-rîf'-e-rus), a. [L. aurifer, gold-bearing, < aurum, gold, + ferre = E. bear] Yielding or producing gold, containing gold as, auriferous quartz, auriferous strata.

Mountains big with mines,

Whence many a burning stream auriferous flows

aurific (â-rîf'ik) a. [L. aurum, gold, + facere, make] Capable of transmuting substances into gold, gold-making.

auriflamme, auriflamme (â-ri-flam'îl, â-ri-flam), n. [ML. auriflamma, lit. golden flame, < L. aurum, gold, + flamma, flame] The ancient royal banner of France. See oriflamme.

auriform (â-ri-form), a. [L. auris, the ear, + forma, form] Ear-shaped, having the form of the external human ear as, an auriform shell.

aurifrisia (â-ri-frîz'î-â), n. Same as auriphrygia.

aurifrisiate (â-ri-frîz'î-ât), a. Same as auriphrygiate.

aurify (â-ri-fî), v. t. and i., pret. and pp. aurified, ppr. aurifying [L. aurum, gold, + facere, make see -fy] To turn into or become gold.

Auriga (â-ri-ga), n. De Quincey, Eng. Mail Coach.

aurigerous (â-ri-g'e-rus), a. [L. aurum, gold, + gerere, bear] Gold-bearing.

aurigraphy (â-ri-g'ra-fî), n. [ML. aurigraphia, < aurigraphus, one who writes in golden characters, < L. aurum, gold, + Gr. ypafeiv, write] The art or practice of writing in golden characters. Blount.

aurilave (â-ri-lâv), n. [L. auris, the ear, + lavare, wash see auricle and lave] An ear-brush. E. H. Knight.

aurin, aurine (â-rin), n. [L. aurum, gold, + -in] The commercial name for impure rosolic acid (which see, under rosolic), one of the coal-tar colors. In its pure state it forms ruby red crystals with a blue fluorescence. Owing to its fugitiveness it is seldom used in dyeing, but it is still used in printing call colors and woolsens and for pigments. It produces orange red colors.

auriphrygia (â-ri-frîz'î-â), n. [ML. auriphrygia, also spelled aurifrisia, aurifrisia, also aurifrygium, also simply phrygium, frigium, gold embroidery, < L. aurum, Phrygian gold, lit. Phrygian gold, the Phrygians were noted for their skill in embroidering with gold.

See aurum and Phrygian. From the same source, through the French, come orfrays, orfray, ophryg, q. v.] Properly, gold embroidery, ecclês, an ornamental band on various vestments, an ophryg used especially of the ophryg of a mitre which is a richly adorned band around its lower edge. Also aurifrisia.

auriphrygiate (â-ri-frîz'î-ât), a. [ML. auriphrygiatus, auriphrygiatus, aurifrisiatus, aurifrisiatus, etc., < auriphrygia see auriphrygia] Embroidered with gold, provided with an auriphrygia. Also aurifrisiate.

Not worn here, but in the church of auriphrygiatus.

Southey, Roderick, xlviii.

auripigment, auripigmentum (â-ri-pîg'ment, â-ri-pîg-men'tum), n. [L. auripigmentum, < aurum, gold, + pigmentum, pigment see aurum and pigment. From the L., through F., comes orpiment] Same as orpiment.

auris (â-ris), n.; pl. auris (â-rîz) [L. = E. ear, q. v.] 1. In zool. and anat., an ear, the outer ear or auricle — 2. [cap.] [NL.] In conch., a genus of ear-shells synonymous with Helix.

auriscalp (â-ri-skulp), n. [L. auriscalpum] An instrument for cleaning the ears, an ear-pick, also, a similar instrument used in surgical operations on the ear.

auriscalpium (â-ri-skulp'i-um), n., pl. auriscalpa (-â) [NL, < L. auris, = E. ear, + scalpere, scrape, scratch see scalpel] 1. Same as auriscalp — 2. [cap.] In conch., a genus of bivalve mollusks.

auriscope (â-ri-skôp), n. [L. auris, = E. ear, + Gr. σκοπεω, view, look at] An instrument for examining and exploring the ear.

aurist (â-rîst), n. [L. auris, = E. ear, + -ist] One who treats disorders of the ear, an otologist.

aurited (â-rî-tîd), a. [L. auritus, = E. eared, < auris = E. ear] 1. [cap.] 2. [cap.] In bot. and zool., eared, auriculate, having lobes or appendages like an ear.

aurocephalous (â-rô-sef'â-lus), a. [L. aurum, gold, + Gr. κεφαλή, head] In zool., characterized by a gold-colored head.

aurochs (â-rôk), n. [G. also auerochse, < MHG uerochse, < OHG uerochse, < ur, a wild ox (= AS ūr = leel ūr, cf. L. urus = Gr. οὐρος, from Teut.), + ochs, < ochs, ochs = E. ox see urox and urus] A species of wild ox or buffalo, the bontas of Aristotle, bison of Pliny, the European bison, Bos or Bison bontas of modern naturalists. This animal was once abundant in many parts of the continent of Europe especially in the neighborhood of large forests. The spread of population has nearly exterminated it, and was it not for the protection afforded by the emperor of Russia to a few herds which inhabit the forests of Lithuania and of Kulan in the Caucasus, it would soon become extinct. Also called urochs, urox, and wrongly, auerochse and aurich. See urus.

The relationships of the aurochs to the American bison, while very close, do not warrant that specific identity.

Miter with Auriphrygia or Aurifrisiate. Miter, 18th century. (from 1. Art pour l'ous.)

which some authors have assumed to exist. The aurochs is rather larger with a smaller thorax, larger and stronger pelves, longer and thicker tail, and less shaggy fore parts. Courc. Encyc. Amer., I 362

Aurocores (a rok'ō-rōz), n pl [NL, < L aurum, gold, + (tr) scopus, a bug] Literally, the gold-bugs, a group of hictopterous hemipterous insects, the same as Cicocores, the name Aurocores being considered more appropriate by Westwood, who proposed it as a substitute. See Cicocores.

Aurocoria (a'ro-kō-rī'zā), n pl [NL] Same as Aurocores.

Aurocyanide (ā-rō-sī'n-nd or -nīd), n [L, aurum, gold, + E cyanide] In chem, a double cyanide, one of the bases of which is gold as, potassium aurocyanide, KAu(CN)₄.

Aurora (a-ro'ra), n [L, the dawn, the goddess of the dawn, earlier Aurora*, = Gr ἠώς (Lacommis), ἠώς (Abolic), ἠώς (Doric), ἠώς (Ionie), ἠώς (Attic), the dawn, goddess of dawn (related to appon, to mow), = Skt ushas, ushāśā*, dawn, < ush, burn, = Gr αἴω = L arere, burn. To the same source are referred L aurum, gold, auster, south wind, Gr ἥλιος, the sun E east, etc. see east] 1 The rising light of the morning, the dawn of day, or morning twilight — 2 [cap] In Rom myth, the goddess of the dawn called Eos by the Greeks. The poetatepainted her as rising out of the ocean in a chariot her fiery fingers dropping gentle dew — 3 The auroi borealis or the aurora australis (the polar lights)

The most probable theory of the aurora is that originally due to Franklin, namely, that it is due to electric discharges in the upper air. S. P. Thompson, Elem. Lessons in Elect. and Mag., p. 761

4 A reddish color produced by dyeing with arnoffo. Aurora australis, the aurora of the southern hemisphere, a phenomenon similar to the aurora of the north. Aurora borealis, the boreal or northern dawn, the northern lights or streamers, a luminous meteoric phenomenon appearing at night. It usually manifests itself by streams of light ascending toward the zenith from a dusky line of cloud or haze, a few degrees above the horizon and stretching from the north toward the west and east as to form an arc with its ends on the horizon. Some times it appears in detached places, at other times it covers almost the whole sky. As the streams of light have a tremulous motion, they are called in many places "the merry dancers." They assume many shapes and a variety of colors, from a pale red or yellow to a deep red or blood color, and in the northern latitudes they serve to illuminate the earth and cheer the gloom of the long winter night. The appearance of the aurora borealis is exactly the same as the effect of artificial electricity that it is exactly reason to believe that the causes are identical. When electricity passes through rarefied air it exhibits a diffused luminous stream which has all the characteristic appearances of the aurora and hence it is highly probable that this natural phenomenon is occasioned by the passage of electricity through the upper regions of the atmosphere although under conditions not as yet entirely understood. The connection of the aurora displays with disturbances of the magnetic needle is now regarded as an established fact. The aurora borealis is said to be frequently accompanied by sound, which is variously described as resembling the rustling of pieces of silk against each other or the sound of wind against the frame of a candle. The spectrum of the aurora is peculiar in consisting of a prominent line in the greenish-yellow (diron line) which has not been identified with any known substance, also occasionally a sharp line in the red and some others less prominent have been observed. Aurora polaris, polar aurora, the aurora of either the northern or the southern hemisphere.

auroral (ā-ro'ral), a [L aurora + -al] 1 Of or pertaining to the dawn

Those steady discharges of auroral light to the zenith along innumerable conducting lines come it is thought, to equalize the electric conditions of the air. J. P. Clarke, Self Culture, xlii

Whittier, Last Walk in Autumn

4. Severely simple, unadorned =Syn. 2 Austere, Severe, Stern, Hard, Harsh, Strict, Rigorous, Rigid, stiff, uncompromising, relentless, may characterize a person's dealings with himself or with others. Austere is the most individual word in the list, it still suggests the etymological sense of dryness and hardness of nature. As applied to manner of life, it implies self mortification, refusal of pleasure, or the self infliction of pain, for the purpose of self-discipline. The austere man may treat others as he treats himself, an austere manner is of a corresponding sort. There is no suggestion of hypocrisy or self righteousness in the word, nor does it go so far as asceticism (see self denial). Severe starts from the notion of seriousness or freedom from levity, but extends through a wide range, covering most of the meanings of the other words. Stern, while primarily meaning fixed in facial expression, applies to almost anything to which severe can apply. Hard is of the same character, but starts from the notion of physical hardness, proceeding thence to mean difficult to endure, unfeeling, etc. Harsh primarily expresses physical roughness, as a harsh touch, and retains some figurative suggestion akin to that idea. Strict is drawn close, tense, not relaxed, observing exact rules for one's self or requiring such observance from others. Rigorous means, literally, stiff, and hence allowing no abatement or mitigation, inflexible, unsparing. Rigid is the same as rigorous, but with somewhat more of the original figurativeness than in rigorous, both are opposed to lax or indulgent. Rigid is more often used of unnescessary, overwrought, or narrow minded strictness than rigorous. We speak of austere morality, a severe aspect, treatment, tone, a stern rebuke, a hard master, voice, judgment, harsh enforcement of laws, strict rules, discipline, repression of mischief, rigorous justice, rigid adherence to petty restrictions. See ascrmony

He [Plutarch] was not so austere as to despise riches, but being in possession of a large fortune, he lived, though not splendidly, yet plentifully
Dryden, Plutarch

For in their looks divine
The image of their glorious Maker shone,
Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure,
Severe, but in true filial freedom placed

6 In Scots law, one from whom a title to property is derived either by inheritance or otherwise, especially, one from whom title is derived by purchase or otherwise than by way of descent.

author (â'thor), v. t. [< author, n.] 1. To occasion; effect; do.

Execrable slaughter! what hand hath authored it?
Fletcher (and others), Bloody Brother, III. 4
Do you two think much
That he thus wisely and with need consents
To what I author for your country's good,
You being my tutor, you my chancellor?
Fletcher (and others), Bloody Brother, III. 1

2. To be authority for; vouch for

More of him I dare not author
Massinger and Field, Fatal Dowry, IV. 2

authoress (â'thor-es), n. [Early mod E. also authoress, authresse, authrice, < late ME. auctrice see author and -ess] A female author, in any sense of that word. [Author is commonly used for both sexes, except in case of special discrimination.]

authorism (â'thor-izm), n. [< author + -ism] Authorship; the position or character of an author [Rare]

He [Burke] is a sensible man, but has not worn off his authorism yet, and thinks there is nothing so charming as writers, and to be one authoritarian (â'thor-i-târ-i-ân), a and n. [< authority + -arian] 1. a Favoring the principle of authority, as opposed to that of individual freedom.

The loyalists, who sympathized most strongly with his authoritarian views
Athenaeum, No. 3068, p. 302

II. n. One who supports the principle of authority, as opposed to that of individual freedom.

By looking only at the beginning and end of his career, an imaginary Napoleon has been obtained who is a lover of liberty, not an authoritarian authoritative (â'thor-i-tâ-tiv), a. [< authority + -ative Cf. ML. auctoritativus] 1. Having due authority, having the sanction or weight of authority; entitled to credence or obedience as, "authoritative teaching," Barrow.

The Law of Duty remains indeed authoritative, but its authority seems scarcely so awful and unique as formerly
J. R. Seeley, Nat. Religion, p. 112

Anselm was compelled to publish an authoritative edition of his Monologium, because so many copies of it were already in circulation from notes of lectures
C. H. Pearson, Early and Mid Ages of Eng., xxv

2. Having an air of authority; positive, peremptory, dictatorial.

The mock authoritative manner of the one and the insipid mirth of the other Swift, Examiner

Dogmatic and authoritative by nature and education, he hardly comprehended the meaning of toleration in matters of religion
W. H. Prynne, Ess. and Rev., II. 60

authoritatively (â'thor-i-tâ-tiv-ly), adv. In an authoritative manner. (a) With due authority.

I think it [the law of repetition] is even more authoritatively present in the minds of most great composers than the law of principle
Ruskin, Elem. of Drawing

(b) With a show of authority.

authoritativeness (â'thor-i-tâ-tiv-nes), n. The quality of being authoritative, an acting by authority; authoritative appearance.

authority (â'thor-i-ti), n.; pl. authorities (-tiz) [Early mod E. also autorite, auctorite, etc., < ME. autorite, auctorite, < OF. autoritet, F. autorité = Pr. autoritat = Sp. autoridad = Pg. autoridade = It. autorità, < L. auctoritās (-tās), counsel, will, decree, liberty, power, weight, authority, < auctor, author, originator. see author] 1. Power or admitted right to command or to act, whether original or delegated as, the authority of a prince over subjects and of parents over children, the authority of an agent to act for his principal. In law, an authority is general when it extends to all acts, or all connected with a particular employment, and special when confined to a single act.

By what authority dost thou these things, and who gave thee this authority?
Mark xi. 28

If law, authority, and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio
Shak., M. of V., III. 2.

If his conscience were so narrow and peculiar to it self, it was not fit his Authority should be so ample and Universal over others.
Milton, Eklogikastes, II.

2. The power derived from opinion, respect, or long-established reputation, influence conferred by character, office, station, mental superiority, or the like; credit. as, the authority of age or example, the authority of Aristotle.

But the mortal enemy unto knowledge, and that which hath done the greatest execution upon truth, hath been a peremptory adhesion unto Authority, and especially the establishing of our beliefs upon the dictates of Antiquities. For (as every capacity may observe), most men of Ages present, so superstitiously do look upon Ages past, that the Authorities of the one exceed the reasons of the other.
Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err. (1646) I. 20

Truth, wisdom, sanctitude severe and pure,
Milton, P. L., IV. 295

3† Power in a general sense

The corrigible authority of this lies in our wills
Shak., Othello, I. 3

4 A person or persons, or a body, exercising power or command generally in the plural as, the civil and military authorities — 5 The outward marks of authority, especially, the expression of authority in the countenance.

Kent. You have that in your countenance which I would fain call master.

Lear. What's that?
Kent. Authority
Shak., Lear, I. 4

6. That to which or one to whom an appeal or reference may be made in support of any opinion, action, or course of conduct. (a) Testimony, witness, that which or one who testifies.

Something I have heard of this, which I would be glad to find by so sweet an authority confirmed
Sir P. Sidney, Had seen

Jesus, Messiah, Son of God declared,
And on that high authority had believed
Milton, P. R., II. 5

(b) Weight of testimony or credibility as, a historian of no authority, "authority of the Scriptures," Hooker.

The registers of the English Peerage are of far higher authority than any other statistical documents.
Macaulay, Sadler's Law of Population

(c) One who possesses adequate knowledge of a subject, and whose opinions or statements may be relied on, an expert, a standard author or his writings as, an authority in matters pertaining to geology.

This practice we may learn, from a better and more ancient authority than any heathen writer hath to give us Milton, Church Government, Pref.

(d) In law, a precedent, a judicial decision, an official declaration or opinion, such as ought to be followed in similar cases. (e) Justification, countenance, warrant.

Thieves for their robbery have authority,
Shak., M. for M., II. 2

Argument from authority Ratio an argumentum ab auctoritate (which see, under argumentum) — Constituted authorities, the magistrates or governors of a nation, people, municipality, etc. — General authority, the authority of a general agent, intended to apply to all matters which arise in the course of business as distinguished from special instances though it may be limited to a particular business and to a particular place — Syn

1. Rule, dominion, government, warrant, permission, authorization — 2. Influence, Authority, Ascendancy, Control, Sway, Domination, may all apply to persons or things, but seem primarily to belong to persons. Influence and authority imply moral power, the others may do so, and are considered to do so here. The words are arranged in the order of their strength. Influence may be small, it is wholly apart from the power of office, the word expresses the extent to which one affects the conduct or character of others simply by their deference to him on account of his station, wealth, ability, character, etc. Authority is, in this connection, influence amounting to a recognized right to command as, the authority of age, wisdom, experience. It is presumably rightful, while the other words often express undue or unwholesome weight or power. Ascendancy is overmastering influence, supremacy by influence, the word is often used in a bad sense as, the ascendancy of cunning over simplicity. Control is complete or successful and continued authority as, his control over the convicts was maintained without resort to force. Sway is, by its derivation, control over that which may be viewed as a weighty or massive object, hence, a solid or powerful or controlling influence. Domination, as it may be an absolute and tyrannical rule, may also be an absolute and tyrannical influence or ascendancy as, he was really under the domination of those whom he thought his servants or tools.

Mourn for the man of ampler influence,
Yet clearest of ambitious crime
Tennyson, Duke of Wellington, IV

In the absolute authority accorded [by the Romans] to the father over the children we may trace the same habits of discipline that proved so formidable in the field
Lecky, Europ. Morals, I. 181

The application of gunpowder to the art of war has for ever settled the long conflict for ascendancy between civilization and barbarism, in favor of the former Calhoun, Works, I. 88

Government has a general superintending control over all the actions and over all the publicly propagated doctrines of men
Burke, Unitarians, May II, 1792

Horrible forms of worship that of old
Held, over the shuddering realms, unquestioned sway
Bryant, The Ages, xxv

Also spelled authorisation.

authorize (â'thor-iz), v. t., pret. and pp. authorized, ppr. authorizing. [Early mod E. also auctorize, < ME. auctorisen, autorisen, < OF. auctorisier, later autoriser, mod F. autoriser = Pr. autorisar = Sp. autorizar = Pg. autorisar = It. autorizzare, < ML. auctorizare, auctorizare, authorizare, etc., < L. auctor, author see author and -ize] 1. To give authority, warrant, or legal power to, empower (a person) as, to authorize commissioners to settle the boundary of a state — 2. To give authority for, approve of and permit, formally sanction (an act or a proceeding).

The report of the commission was taken into immediate consideration by the senate. They resolved, without one dissenting voice, that the order signed by William did not authorize the slaughter of Glencairn.
Macaulay, Hist. Eng., xxi

The money then, is borrowed on the credit of the United States — an act which Congress alone is competent to authorize
D. Webster, Speech, Senate, May 7, 1834

3† To make authoritative or valid, legalize; validate.

She shall authorize
Our undertakings to the ignorant people,
As if what we do were by her command
Fletcher (and another), Palm One, v. 2

4 To establish by authority or usage as, an authorized idiom — 5 To warrant, vouch for [Rare].

A woman's story at a winter's fit,
Shak., Macbeth, III. 4

6† To support (one's self) upon the authority (of)

Sir P. Sidney, Def. of Poesie (Arber), p. 31

Also spelled authorize authorizer (â'thor-i-zér), n. One who authorizes. Also spelled authoriser.

authorlet (â'thor-let), n. [< author + -let] A petty author. Blackwood's Mag. [Rare]

Longfellow, Hypocritism, IV. 1

authorly (â'thor-li), a. [< author + -ly] Belonging to an author, authorial. [Rare]

He keeps his own authority secrets
Cowper, Letter to Unwin

authorship (â'thor-ship), n. [< author + -ship] 1. The source or cause of anything that may be said to have an author, origination, causation as, the authorship of an invention or of a political movement, a book whose authorship is unknown — 2. The state of being an author, the occupation of writing books.

If the formalists of this sort were erected into patentees with a sole commission of authorship, we should undoubtedly see such writing in our days as would either wholly wean us from all books in general, or at least from all such as were the product of our own nation auto (ou'ô), n. [Sp. Pg. < L. actus, an act: see act, n.] 1. In Spanish literature, a play.

Furn. Brit., XIX. 556

2. In Spanish law (a) An order, a decree, a sentence, a decision. (b) pl. The pleadings and proceedings in a lawsuit — 3. An auto de fe auto. autocephalous (â-tô-sef'al-us), a [*< (Gr. autô, self, + kephalê, head)*] 1 Having a head or chief of its own, independent of jurisdiction applied to a church

The Russian Church became autocephalous, and its patriarch had immense power. Encyc. Brit., XI, 167

2 Acting as an independent head; having primary jurisdiction as, an autocephalous bishop or metropolitan

We have seen Greek prelates in their Holy Governing Synod autocephalous. J. M. Nale, Eastern Church, I, 10

autochronograph (â-tô-kron'ô-graf'ik), n [*< (Gr. autô, self, + chronograph)*] An instrument for instantaneously and automatically recording time autochthon (â-tok'thon), n; pl autochthones, autochthones (-thons, -tho-nêz) [*< L. autochthon, pl, < Gr. autô, self, + khôv, land, earth*] 1 aborigines, primitive inhabitants, lit sprung from the land itself (it was the belief of the ancient Athenians and some other Greeks that they sprang originally from the soil on which they lived), < autô, self, + khôv, land, earth] 1 Laterally, one sprung from the land he inhabits, hence, one of the primitive inhabitants of a country, a member of the race found in a country when first known, an aboriginal inhabitant

Whom the artist may have been, it [a statue] is undoubtedly a very able conception, the figure seeming to rise from the earth just as an autochthon would be thought to rise. A. S. Murray, Greek Sculpture, I, 224, note

Their own traditions appear to have made them [the Phrygians] autochthones, or aborigines, and it would seem that they believed the people of the earth after the flood to have begun in their country. G. Henslow, Origin of Nations, p. 67

2 pl The primitive animals or plants of a country or region, especially in geological time [Rare]

autochthonal (â-tok'tho-nal), a [< autochthon + -al] Autochthonic, aboriginal as, autochthonal peoples autochthonic (â-tok'thon'ik), a, [< autochthon + -ic] Of or pertaining to an autochthon, native to or sprung from the soil, aboriginal, indigenous

The aborigines of the country [were] driven, like the Bechees and other autochthonic Indians, into the eastern and southeastern wilds bordering upon the ocean. R. F. Burton, El Medinah, p. 20

We may however, venture the assertion that the Eskimo is of autochthonic origin in Asia. Arc Cruise of the Corwin, 1881, p. 30

autochthonism (â-tok'tho-nizm), n [< autochthon + -ism] Birth from the soil

According to the Scythians Targitatus lived just a thousand years before the year 513 B. C.—a legend which, taken with the tradition of autochthonism, indicates a much earlier date for the immigration of the Scythians than we should deduce from other narratives. Phryc. Brit., XXI, 576 autochthonous (â-tok'tho-nus), a [< autochthon + -ous] 1 Pertaining to autochthons; indigenous, sprung from the soil, aboriginal

I speak here of ancient religions only, of what are sometimes called national or autochthonous religions—

not of those founded in later times by individual prophets or reformers. Max Müller, India, p. 116

One would almost be inclined to think from Herr Stahl's account of the matter, that Lessing had been an autochthonous birth of the German soil, without intellectual ancestry or helpful kindred. Lowell, Among my Books, 1st ser., p. 301

2 In pathol, not extraneous, originating at the place where found autochthonously (â-tok'tho-nus-li), adv In an autochthonous manner autocratism (â-tô-krat-ship), n, [< autocrat + -ship] The office of autocrat.

auto da fé (ou'tô dâ fâ); pl autos da fé (ou'tôs) [Pg. auto da fé = Sp. auto da fé (Pg. da, < de, a, where a is the fem art., < *L. *illa)] Same as auto da fé. [This Portuguese form, commonly written auto da fé or auto-da-fé, was the first introduced, and has been most used in English literature.]

auto da fé (ou'tô dâ fâ), pl autos da fé (ou'tôs) [Sp., lit. act (judicial process, judgment) of faith auto, < *L. actum, an act; de, < *L. de, from, of; fé = Pg. fé, < *L. fidem, acc of fides, faith: see act, n., de, fé, fé, and faith. Cf. auto da fé.] The public declaration of the judgment passed on accused persons who had been tried before the courts of the Spanish Inquisition, and by extension the infliction of such penalties as had been prescribed in the sentence. The declaration of judgment was usually made with much solemnity, in an open place, and included the acquittal, reception to retraction, official admonition, and sentence of punishment for the crimes within the competency of the court. These crimes were public profession of heresy, apostasy, witchcraft, seduction by ecclesiastical bigamy, unnatural crimes, church robbery, blasphemy, usury, and, in general, crimes of or against the officers of the Inquisition itself. Those convicted were brought from prison, dressed in the sanbenito, or robe of defamed criminals, which was worked with a cross and other designs, sometimes with grotesque scenes of infernal characters or torments, and varied in its color and pattern in accordance with the severity of the sentence to be passed. Each offender was called by name, his crime specified, and his punishment declared, after which all were delivered up to the civil officials. Here the auto proper finished, but as the execution of those penalties that were of capital or corporal nature immediately followed, the name was extended to this part, as applied to which it has become popularly accepted. Such punishments were flogging, the pillory, branding or maiming, and death by hanging or burning, according to the prescriptions of the imperial or Caroline code.

autodidact (â-tô-di-dakt'), n [*< Gr. autodidaktês, self-taught, < autô, self, + didaktês, verbal adj of didasko, teach* see didactic] A self-taught person [Rare]

autodidactic (â-tô-di-dak'tik), a [< autodidact + -ic] Self-taught. [Rare]

He [Menzel] was from the beginning an auto didactic realist, he drew and painted as he saw—not as others taught him how they had seen.

autodynamic (â-tô-di-nam'ik), a [*< Gr. autodynamos, powerful of itself, < autô, self, + dinamos, power: see *dynamic] Having power or force in itself.—Autodynamic elevator, a hydraulic machine in which the weight of a falling column of water is made to raise a smaller column to a height exceeding that of the first.

autocécious (â-tô-âhus), a, [*< Gr. autô, self, + oikos, dwelling*] In botany, having both male and female inflorescence on the same plant, monœcious. Three modifications are cladautocécious, gonautocécious, and rhizautocécious. Also written autocœus autogamous (â-tôg'a-mus), a, [*< Gr. autô, self, + gamos, marriage; cf. autogamy, willingly married*] Self-fertilized: applied to flowers which are fertilized by their own pollen, in distinction from anemophilous and entomophilous flowers, in which one flower is fertilized by pollen from another through the intervention of the wind or of insects autogamy (â-tôg'a-mi), n [*< Gr. autô, self, + gamos, marriage* Cf. autogamous.] In bot, close fertilization, or self-fertilization; the fertilization of a flower by its own pollen. See allogamy.

autogeneal (â-tô-jê-nê-al), a [*< Gr. autogênês, see *autogenous] Self-begotten; autogenous

autogeneous (â-tô-jê-nê-us), a Same as autogenous

autogenesis (â-tô-jen'e-sis), n [*< Gr. autô, self, + genesis, production*] Self-production; production independent, (a) in organisms, of parent organisms; (b) in tissues, of parent tissues, and (c) in disease, of previous cases of zymotic disease

autogenetic (â-tô-jê-net'ik), a, [*< autogenesis: see *genetic] Self-producing; pertaining to autogenesis

There was no doubt of the existence of autogenetic puerperal fever. Brit. Med. Jour., No. 1319

autogenetically (â-tô-jê-net'ik-al), adv By autogenesis, or autogenetic processes

Some septic poison, either from without or autogenetically, might cause the same. Brit. Med. Jour., No. 1319

autogenic (â-tô-jen'ik), a, [*< (As autogenous + -ic)*] Self-produced; independent of a medium specifically applied to a process of soldering in which pieces of metal are united by fusing the parts to be joined. See autogenous

Platinum workers have long learned to unite two platinum seams by the autogenic process—the local fusing of the two contiguous parts in the oxyhydrogen flame. Encyc. Brit., XIX, 190.

autogenous (â-toj'e-nus), a. [< Gr. αὐτογενής, self-produced, < αὐτός, self, + γένος, kind, race, offspring. see genus, -genous.] 1. Self-produced; self-generated; coming forth independently. Specifically, in anat., endogenous applied to those processes or parts of a bone which arise from an independent or separate center of ossification, as distinguished from mere exogenous outgrowth. Thus, the epiphyses of a bone are autogenous, apophyses may be either autogenous or exogenous.

The centrum and several of the apophyses of a vertebra are autogenous, while other apophyses are exogenous. Owen

2 Same as autogenic.

Also autogeneus

Autogenous soldering, the process of uniting pieces of metal by the fusion of part of their own substance, with out the use of a special solder. It is performed by means of the alrohydrogen or oxyhydrogen blowpipe and by electricity.

autogenously (â-toj'e-nus-li), adv. 1. In an autogenous manner.

The anterior, or more properly inferior, bar of the transverse process of the seventh, and occasionally of some of the other cervical vertebrae in Man, is autogenously developed. W. H. Flower, Osteology, p. 20

2 By the autogenous process of soldering.

This battery is constructed of a case of insulite, having a lid of the same material autogenously soldered in. J. W. Queen, Elect. Catalogue, 1883, p. 16

autogeny (â-toj'e-ni), n. [< Gr. αὐτογενής (see autogenous); see -geny.] Autogenesis, autogeny, spontaneous generation.

autogeny (â-toj'e-ni), n. [< Gr. αὐτογενής, self-produced, self-producing, < αὐτός, self, + γένος, produced, see -geny.] The generation of simple organisms from a lifeless fluid, abiogenesis.

autograph (â-tô-gráf), a and n. [< F. autographe, < L. autographus, < Gr. αὐτόγραφος, written with one's own hand, < αὐτός, self, + γράφω, write.] 1. a. Written by one's self, in one's own handwriting as, an autograph letter.

II. n. [< F. autographe, < L. autographum.] 1. A person's own handwriting; something written by a person's own hand, an original manuscript or signature.

Autographs of famous names were to be seen in faded ink on some of their fly leaves. Thackeray, Old Manx, I, 298

2 An autographic press (which see, under press).

autograph (â-tô-gráf), v. t. [< autograph, n.] 1. To write with one's own hand — 2 To write one's autograph on or in — 3 To copy or produce in autograph, or by an autographic process. See autographic.

Announcements and notices of various kinds, whether printed, engraved, lithographed, or autographed. U. S. Postal Guide, July, 1879

It contains 80 autographed pages out of the 1,100 of which the whole work will consist. Trubner's American and Oriental Lit. Record, X, 4

autographal (â-tô-gráf'al), a [< autograph + -al.] Autographic. Bennet autographic (â-tô-gráf'ik), a [< autograph + -ic, = F. autographique.] 1. Pertaining to or of the nature of an autograph, contained in or furnished by one's own handwriting as, autographic authority, autographic evidence — 2. Relating to or used in the process of autographing as, autographic ink, autographic paper — 3. Self-recording applied to a form of telegraph. See below — Autographic press. See press — Autographic process. (a) In the fine arts, any process by means of which an artist's work is exactly preserved in mechanical reproductions, as in an autotype or a photo engraving. (b) A general term applied to those chemical and mechanical processes in which a writing or drawing is made with a peculiar ink, and then transferred to the stone, plate, or other matrix from which it is to be printed — Autographic telegraph, an instrument for transmitting a telegraphic despatch written in insulating ink upon a metallic paper, and reproducing it with absolute exactness on another prepared paper. The instrument may be used for transmitting portraits or other figures, diagrams, etc.

autographical (â-tô-gráf'ik-al), a Same as autographic.

autographically (â-tô-gráf'ik-al-i), adv. In an autographic manner, by means of autographic writings; in autograph.

And had "shaken hands autographically" with him across the Atlantic. D. Hull, Life of Irving, p. 150

autography (â-tô-gráf'i), n. [< autograph + -y, = F. autographie.] 1. The act of writing with one's own hand; autographic writing. — 2. That department of diplomatics, or the study and decipherment of old writings, which is concerned with autographs — 3. A process in lithography by which copies of a writing, drawing, etc., are produced in facsimile.

autolous (â-toi'kus), a Same as autolous.

auto-inoculability (â-tô-in-ok'â-lâ-bil'i-ti), n. [< auto-inoculable. see -ibility.] Capacity for auto-inoculation.

auto-inoculable (â-tô-in-ok'â-lâ-bil), a. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + inoculable.] Possessing the power of auto-inoculation; capable of being propagated by auto-inoculation: as, an auto-inoculable disease.

auto-inoculation (â-tô-in-ok'â-lâ-shon), n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + inoculation.] The inoculation of a healthy part of the body with the virus from a diseased part of the same person, as from a chancre.

auto-insulator (â-tô-in'suf-lâ-tor), n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + insulator.] An instrument used for administering to one's self a medicinal powder.

autokinesis, n. [< LGr. αὐτοκίνησις, (Gr. αὐτοκίνησις, self-movement, < αὐτοκίνητος, self-moved, see autokinetic.)] Self-movement, spontaneous motion. Cudworth autokinetic (â-tô-ki-net'ik-al), a [< Gr. αὐτοκίνητος, < αὐτοκίνητος, self-moved, < αὐτός, self, + κίνησις, motion. see kinetic.] Self-moving. Dr. H. More.

autolaryngoscope (â-tô-lâ-ring'gô-skôp), n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + laryngoscope.] An instrument, consisting of a combination of mirrors, by which one may inspect his own larynx. E. H. Knight autolaryngoscopy (â-tô-lâ-ring-gôs'kô-pi), n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + laryngoscopy.] The inspection of one's own larynx by means of an autolaryngoscope.

autolatry (â-tô-lâ-tri), n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + λατρεία, worship.] Self-worship.

autology (â-tô-lô-jî), n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + λόγος, < λέγω, speak. see -ology.] The scientific study of one's self.

Autolytus (â-tô-lî-tus), n. [NL, < Gr. αὐτός, self, + λυτός, verbal adj. of λύω, loose.] A genus of chaetopodous annelids, of the family Syll-

Autolytus ornatus

lida a synonym of Syllis. A polytrem is an asexual form, the opposite sexual forms of which have been called Polytremus and Saccocera.

automat, n. An erroneously assumed singular of automata. See automaton.

It is an automa run under water.
With a snug nose, and has a nimble tail.
Made like an angler.

B. Johnson, Staple of News, III, 1

automalite, n. See automolite.

automata, n. Plural of automaton.

automatal (â-tô-mâ-tal), a [< automaton + -al.] Same as automatic. [Rare.]

automath (â-tô-math), n. [< Gr. αυτομάτης, self-taught, < αὐτός, self, + μαθημαί, mathemai, learn. see mathematics.] One who is self-taught. [Rare.] automatic (â-tô-mat'ik), a [< Gr. αὐτόματος, self-moving (see automaton), + -ic.] 1. Acting as an automaton. (a) Having the power of self-motion self-acting as automatic machinery. (b) Done unconsciously or from force of habit: mechanical, as opposed to voluntary.

2. Conducted or carried on by self-acting machinery.

It is in our modern cotton and flax mills that automatic operations are displayed to most advantage. Cra. Dict., I, 274

3. In physiol. (a) Not voluntary; not under the control of, or not effected by, volition. said of certain muscular actions.

Let me briefly notice some of our other automatic actions. In the act of swallowing, which properly begins at the back of the throat, the "swallow" lays hold of the food or the drink brought to it by the muscles of the mouth and carries this down into the stomach. We are quite unconscious of its passage thither unless we have taken a large morsel or something hotter or colder than ordinary. This is an instance of purely automatic action. W. B. Carpenter

In animals, too, to a far greater extent than in plants, is the automatic activity which always exists in protoplasm itself transmitted by the mechanism of the organization to different parts of the organism or to the whole of it. L. F. Ward, Dynam. Sociol., I, 354

(b) Not reflex, said, for example, of certain activities of ganglion-cells — Automatic brake. See brake. — Automatic coupling. See coupling. — Automatic mallet. Same as dental hammer (which see, under hammer). — Automatic theory. Same as automatism.

automatical (â-tô-mat'ik-al), a 1 Same as automatic — 2 Having reference to or connected with automatic things.

automatically (â-tô-mat'ik-al-i), adv. 1 In an automatic manner; mechanically, unconsciously.

George Eliot, Mill on the Floss, VI, 13.

We know that a frequently repeated act of muscular skill finally comes to be done almost automatically and with little intervention of consciousness. Science, IV, 473

2. By automatic means, by its own action.

Sci. Amer., N. Y., IV, 55

Automatically keeping its temperature uniform. Jour. Franklin Inst., CXVI, Supp. 7

automaticity (â-tô-mat'is'i-ti), n. The state of being automatic, automatic action. Matth. Human Body (3d ed.), p. 23

automatism (â-tô-mâ-tizm), n. [< automaton + -ism.] Cf. Gr. αὐτοματισμός, that which happens of itself, a chance. 1. Automatic or involuntary action in pathol., sometimes specifically applied to such purposeless actions as are often exhibited by patients after an epileptic fit.

In considering the body as the instrument of the mind, I shall show you first, the large amount of automatism in the human body. W. B. Carpenter

2. The doctrine that animals, especially those below man, are automata, in the sense that all the phenomena exhibited by them are results of physical laws, especially, the doctrine of Descartes that animals are devoid of consciousness — 3. The faculty of independently originating action or motion. [From the original sense of automaton.] N. E. D.

automatist (â-tô-mâ-tist), n. [< automaton + -ist.] Cf. Gr. αὐτοματιστής, one who refers all things to chance. 1. One who makes automata — 2. One who believes that animals (sometimes including man) are automata. See automatism, 2.

automatize (â-tô-mâ-tiz), v. t., pret. and pp. automatized, ppr. automatizing. [< automaton + -ize.] Cf. Gr. αὐτοματίζω, act of one's self, introduce the agency of chance, happen by chance. To make an automaton or a self-acting machine of.

A God created man, all but abrogating the character of man, forced to exist automatized, mummy wick, as Gentlemen or Gigmans. Carlyle, Diamond Necklace, I automaton (â-tô-mâ-ton), n., pl. automata, automatons (-tî, -tôn) [Formerly also automatum, < L. automaton, automatum, < Gr. αὐτόματος, neut. of αὐτόματος, acting of one's self, self-moving, spontaneous, < αὐτός, self, + μάτος (> μαίνομαι, seek, strive to do), verbal adj. of μάω (pert. μάω), strive after, move.] 1. That which is self-moving, or has the power of spontaneous movement, but is not conscious.

So great and admirable an automaton as the world. Boyle, Works, V, 251

Specifically — 2. A self-acting machine, or one which is actuated in such a manner as to carry on for some time certain movements without the aid of external impulse. In this respect clocks and watches, with a vast number of other machines, may be denominated automata. But the term more specifically denotes an apparatus in which the purposely concealed power is made to imitate the voluntary or mechanical motions of living beings, such as men, horses, birds, fishes, etc.

3. A living being acting mechanically or as a mere machine, especially without consciousness, a person or an animal whose actions are purely involuntary or mechanical. See bestial automaton, below.

Obdience,
Bane of all genius, virtue, freedom, truth,
Makes slaves of men and of the human frame
A mechanized automaton. Shelley, Queen Mab, III

4. A person who acts in a monotonous routine manner, without active intelligence, especially without being fully aware of what he is doing. — Automaton balance, a machine for weighing plan chests and coin and sorting the pieces automatically, according to their weight as full, light, or heavy. — Bestial automaton, in the Cartesian philosophy, a brute, as supposed to be devoid of consciousness and mobility. — Spiritual automaton, a mind not possessing free will, but subject to necessity.

automatous (â-tô-mâ-tus), a [< Gr. αὐτόματος, automatic (see automaton), + -ous.] Automatic.

(Clocks or automatous organs, whereby we now distinguish of time, have found no mention in any ancient writers. Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Err., v, 18

autometric (â-tô-met'rik), a Of or pertaining to autometry.

autometry (â-tô-met'ri), n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + μέτρον, < μέτρον, measure.] Self-measurement, self-estimation. N. E. D.

automobile (â-tô-mô-bîl), a and n. [< Gr. αὐτός, self, + λήμιον, mobile.] 1. A self-moving, or self-movable, changing its own place, or able to effect change of its own place; as, an automobile torpedo

II. n A self-moving vehicle designed to travel on common roads, specifically, a wheeled vehicle for use on roads without rails, which carries in itself a mechanical motor, with its source of power

Electric Automobile

Automobiles are distinguished from locomotives by the fact that they do not travel on a fixed track, and both from locomotives and traction engines by carrying loads instead of drawing them in other vehicles. The number of wheels may be two (bicycle), three (tricycle), four, or more. Those with four wheels (the commonest form) are built for nearly every variety of purpose of ordinary vehicles, such as carriages and cabs for two or more persons, omnibuses, merchants' delivery wagons and drays. Automobiles are usually provided with pneumatic tires and ball bearings. The four-wheeled electric automobile may be taken as a type of these vehicles. The front wheel is turned by a steering handle, and the rear or driving wheels are connected with an electric motor on the rear axle through the medium of a balance or compensating gear, so that one wheel may revolve slower than the other in turning the vehicle. The motor drives its power from a battery of storage cells within the body of the vehicle, which are coupled in parallel for inaction for various speeds by means of a controller placed under the vehicle, and shifted from one position to another by a hand lever, to which it is connected by a chain and sprocket gear. In certain positions of the controller the automobile is made to run backward at different speeds. A foot lever is connected with hand brakes which act on surfaces formed on the periphery of the internal gears which are attached to the driving wheels. The vehicle is provided with meters for measuring the electric current, and with electric lights and an electric going. Automobiles are named according to the number of wheels when this is less than four, as automobile bicycle and automobile tricycle, and according to the kind of motor used, as compressed-air automobile, electric automobile, petroleum automobile and steam automobile. Compressed-air automobile, an automobile which is propelled by an air motor. Electric automobile, an automobile which is propelled by an electric motor. Petroleum automobile, an automobile which is propelled by a motor of the gas engine type that uses petroleum, or such derivatives of petroleum as gasoline or naphtha. Variation of speed is obtained by the use of a change gear between the motor and the driving wheels, by choking the supply of gas to or rich exhaust from the engine, or by the use together of two or more of these methods. Steam automobile, an automobile which is propelled by a steam engine. Steam automobiles are also called steam-carriages or steam wagons.

Electric Automobile

automobile (a-tō-mō'bīl), v t To ride in an automobile vehicle. [Recent] Cosmopolitan, XXV 485

automobilism (a-tō-mō'bīl-izm), n The use of automobile vehicles. [Recent] automolite (ā-tōm'ōlīt), n [Gr αὐτόμολος, a descriptor, prop adj, going of one's self (< αὐτός, self, + μέλλω, go, or come), + -ίτης] A name sometimes given to galinite, from the fact that it contains a large proportion of zinc oxid, though it has no resemblance to an ore. See galinite. Also spelled automolite.

automorphic (ā-tō-mōr'fīk), a [Gr αὐτομορφός, self formed, natural (taken as 'formed upon one's own self or pattern'), < αὐτός, self, + μορφή, form] Framed or conceived after the pattern or form of one's self. H Spencer, Study of Sociol, p 114

automorphically (ā-tō-mōr'fī-kāl-ī), adv In an automorphic manner. H Spencer

automorphism (a-tō-mōr'fizm), n [As automorphic + -ism] The ascription of one's own characteristics to another, or the habit of judging others or explaining their acts by means of analogies furnished by the knowledge of one's self autonomic (ā-tō-nom'īk), a [As autonom-ous

+ -ic] Relating to autonomy; having the power of self-government; autonomous; self-governing, independent autonomist (ā-ton'ō-mīst), n [Gr αὐτονομία, self, + νόμος, hold sway, νόμος, law: see nome] 1 One who advocates or favors the principle of autonomy, one who desires home rule, or self-government of the community to which he belongs, or of any community autonomous (ā-ton'ō-mus), a [Gr αὐτόνομος, independent, of one's own free will, < αὐτός, self, + νόμος, hold sway, νόμος, law: see nome] 1 Of or pertaining to autonomy or an autonomy — 2 Independent in government, having the right of self-government

The few brave men who seven years back first unheeded their yataghans amid the hills of Herzegovina did not carry with them a scheme for an autonomous province of Eastern Roumelia.

E A Freeman, Amer Lects, p 445.

3 Subject to its own laws, specifically, in biol, independent of any other organism, not a form or stage of development of some other organism autonomously (ā-ton'ō-mus-ē), adv In an autonomous manner; from one's own choice autonomy (ā-ton'ō-mī), n, pl autonomies (-mīz) [Gr αὐτονομία, independence, < αὐτόνομος, independent: see autonomous] 1 The power or right of self-government, whether in a community which elects its own magistrates and makes its own laws, or in an individual who acts according to his own will — 2 A self-governing community — 3 An autonomous condition, the condition of being subject only to its own laws, especially, in biol, organic independence — 4 In the philos of Kant, the doctrine that the moral law is one which reason imposes upon itself a priori, that is, independently of sense and sense-experience, and is therefore absolute and immutable, opposed to heteronomy (which see) autonym (ā-tō-nīm), n [Gr αὐτὸν, self, + ονομα, dial ὄνομα, name] 1 One's own name, a real name, opposed to pseudonym and anonym — 2 That which bears one's own name, as a book published under the author's real name — 3 The self-same name, one and the same name for two or more things, a homonym. [Rare] autopathic (ā-tō-path'īk), a [Gr αὐτοπάθεια, self, + πάθος, feeling, suffering] 1 In pathol, dependent on the original structure and developmental tendencies of the individual, endopathic, as opposed to exopathic — 2 applied to certain forms of disease

autopathy (ā-tōp'a-thī), n [Gr αὐτοπάθεια, one's own feeling or experience, < αὐτοπάθος, speaking from one's own feeling or experience, < αὐτός, self, + πάθος, feeling, suffering] Egoistic sentiment or feeling, exclusive self-consideration

Autophagi (ā-tof'a-jī), n pl [NL, pl. of autophagus, self-feeding: see autophagous] In ornith, a name of the precocial birds which are able to run about and feed themselves as soon as they are hatched, synonymous with Ptilopodes or Dasypteres autophagous (ā-tof'a-gus), a [NL autophagus, self-feeding, < Gr αὐτοφαγός, self-devouring, < αὐτός, self, + φαγίω, eat, devour] 1. Self-devouring — 2 Self-feeding, capable of feeding itself, as a precocial bird, equivalent in application (but not in meaning) to hethogamous or ptilopadic, and opposed in meaning to heterophagous (which see) autophagy (ā-tof'a-jī), n [= F. autophagie, as autophagous + -y] The act of feeding upon one's self autophoby (ā-tō-fō-bī), n [Gr αὐτός, self, + φόβος, fear: see -phobia] Fear of referring to one's self, fear of being egotistical. Hare. [Rare]

autophon (a-tō-fon), n [Gr αὐτόφωνος, self-sounding, < αὐτός, self, + φωνή, voice, sound] A form of barrel-organ, of which the tunes are determined by perforations in a sheet of mill-board cut to correspond with the desired notes. E H Knight autophony (a-tof'ō-nī), n [NL autophonia (in form as if < Gr αὐτοφῶνα, the voice itself), < Gr αὐτόφωνος, self-sounding: see autophon] In auscultation, the character of the sound of the auscultator's own voice when his head is placed against the chest of the patient. When there is a large cavity this sound may be rendered of greater intensity than is normal

autophthalmoscope (ā-tof-thal'mō-skōp), n

[< Gr αὐτός, self, + ophthalmoscope.] An instrument by which one may inspect the interior of one's own eyes autophyllogeny (ā-tō-fī-lōj'e-nī), n [Gr αὐτός, self, + φύλλον, leaf, + -γένεσις, production: see -geny.] A term proposed by Morren for the abnormal growth of leaves from leaves.

autopistia (ā-tō-pis-tī), n [Gr αὐτόπιστος, credible in itself, < αὐτός, self, + πιστός, credible, worthy of belief, < πείθειν, persuade.] Worthiness of belief from internal evidence; the quality of credibility existing in a statement itself, independently of external evidence or corroboration. [Rare]

autoplast (ā-tō-plast), n [Gr αὐτόπλαστος, self-formed, < αὐτός, self, + πλαστός, verbal adj of πλάσσειν, form] In embryol, an autogenous cell, that is, a cell which appears to take form spontaneously in the yolk of an ovum, not by fission or the regular process of cleavage of the vitellus

autoplastic (ā-tō-plas'tīk), a Pertaining to autoplasty autoplasty (ā-tō-plas-tī), n [As autoplast + -y] In surg, an operation by which lesions accompanied with loss of substance are repaired by means of healthy portions of tissue taken from another part of the patient, and made to supply the deficiency. See rhinoplasty.

autopolygraph (ā-tō-pol'i-grāf), n [Gr αὐτός, self, + polygraph] An autographic printing process. E H Knight

autopsia (ā-tōp'sī-ā), n [NL, < Gr αὐτοψία, a seeing with one's own eyes, < αὐτοπτομαι, seen by one's self, < αὐτός, self, + ὀπτομαι, seen (cf οὐκ οὐκ, sight) see opto] Same as autopsy, 1

autopsic (ā-tōp'sīk), a [Gr αὐτοψία, a seeing with one's own eyes, < αὐτοπτομαι, seen by one's self, < αὐτός, self, + ὀπτομαι, seen (cf οὐκ οὐκ, sight) see opto] Same as autopsy, 1 autopsical (ā-tōp'sī-kāl), a Same as autopsic

autopsically (ā-tōp'sī-kāl-ī), adv Same as autopsically autopsy (ā-tōp'sī), n [Gr αὐτοψία, q v] 1 A seeing for one's self, personal ocular observation, inspection, or examination. Specifically — 2 In pathol and anat, dissection and inspection of a dead body to discover the cause of death, or the site and character of the disease of which the person died, post-mortem examination, a post-mortem autoptic (ā-tōp'tīk), a [Gr αὐτοπτικός, < αὐτοπτομαι, seen by one's self: see autopsia] Seen with one's own eyes, relating to or based on autopsy or personal observation as, autoptic evidence. Also written autopsic

autoptical (ā-tōp'tī-kāl), a Same as autoptic

autoptically (ā-tōp'tī-kāl-ī), adv In an autoptic manner, by ocular view or one's own observation. Also written autopsically autori, n. An obsolete form of author

autorial, a. An obsolete form of authorial

[< F. avalanche (also avalange), dial form (Swiss avalanche) of avalance* (ML. avalantia), lit descent, < avaler, let fall down see avale and -ance.] 1. The fall or sliding down of a mass of snow or ice from a mountain-slope. The sliding down of ordinary snow is, in high snow covered mountains, an event of frequent occurrence, and is generally not dangerous or destructive, since it mostly takes place high above habitations and forests. Partly consolidated snow, or neve, however, is sometimes set in motion in large quantities, and such an occurrence may be productive of very serious injury, especially to the forests below. Small glaciers sometimes detach themselves from their rocky beds and fall into the valley below, such events are rare, but have sometimes been attended by very disastrous results. The more terrible catastrophes which have occurred, and by which, especially in the Alps, whole villages have been buried, have been due to the sliding down of a portion of the rock itself of which the mountain was formed. These "rock avalanches," as they are sometimes called, are more properly denominated land slips or land slides. See land slip, land slide

Around his [Mont Blanc's] waist are forests braided,

So for a good old gentlemanly vice

Byron, Don Juan I 216.

=Syn Avarice, Covetousness, Cupidity, penuriousness, closeness, miserliness, all denote bad qualities, or options of the natural instinct of possession. Avarice, literally greediness, a strong desire to get objects of value, has become limited, except in figurative uses, so as to express only a sordid and mastering desire to get wealth. Covetousness and cupidity are not limited to wealth, but may have for their object anything that can be desired, cupidity being directed especially toward material things. Covetousness longs to possess that which belongs to another. Hence the prohibition in the tenth commandment (Ex xx 17). Cupidity is more active than the others, it is groveling and more ready to snatch from others that which covetousness may wish for without trying to get. See penurious ave (ā-vē or ā-ve), interj [*L. hail*¹ orig impv of avere, be well, be of good cheer; esp. in LL. phrase Ave Maria, hail Mary! in allusion to Luke 1:28: "Ave [Maria], gratia plena"] Hail! Also, farewell!

There grows,

And "Ave, Ave, Ave" said, "Adieu, adieu," for evermore Tennyson, In Memoriam, IV. 11

Ave Maria, the Hail Mary, a devotion or prayer used in the Western Church. In the older form it consists of the salutation of the angel Gabriel to the Virgin Mary when he announced to her the incarnation (Luke 1:28), together with the words of Elizabeth to Mary (Luke 1:42). This form of the Hail Mary was used as an anthem in both the Eastern and Western churches as early as the seventh century. It came into wide use as a devotion in the eleventh century. The concluding words, "Holy Mary, Mother of God, pray for us," etc., were first introduced in the fifteenth century, and first authorized for daily use in the breviary in 1568. Also called the angelic salutation. See angelus average¹ (av'e-rāj), n. [= Sc. avarage, contr. arrage, arage, now arriage, esp. in the combination arrage and carriage, < late ME. avarage, earlier only in ML. averagium or OF. avarage, appar. the same, with suffix -age, as ML. avera, a kind of service mentioned in Domesday Book, usually referred to aver, a beast of burden, and defined accordingly; but this is doubtful, avera being more prob. a reflex, simulating aver, of OF. avre, avre, mod F œuvre, < L. opera, work see opera, ure, manœuvre.] In old law, a kind of service owed by tenants to their superior. The nature of the service is not clear. It is usually explained as service done with beasts of burden, but this appears to rest on a doubtful etymology (see above)

average² (av'e-rāj), n. and a [Early mod E also averige, averidge, avaridge, < late ME. average, the same, with suffix -age (found only in E and Anglo-L. averagium), as late ME. averays (for averys?), < F. avaris, 'decay of wares or merchandise, leaking of wines, also the charges of the carriage or measuring thereon, also the fees or veils of a cook, etc.' (Cotgrave), sing. prop. avarie = Sp. averia = Pg. It. avaria, in ML. avaria, averia, of MD. avary, D. havery = G. haver, haverie, of Dan. havari = Sw. haveri, from Rom. Origin disputed, the orig. sense, 'a duty on goods,' suggests a connection with ML. avaria, goods, property see *aver*². Perhaps avaria, through its appar. more orig. form avaria, is to be referred to the same source see avama.] L. n. 1 (a) A duty or tax upon goods. (b) A small charge payable by the shippers of goods to the master of the ship, over and above the freight, for his care of the goods. Hence the clause, in bills of lading, "paying so much freight, with primago and average accustomed" (c) A small charge paid by the master on account of the ship and cargo, such as pilotage, towage, etc. called more specifically petty average. (d) A loss, or the sum paid on account of a loss (such as that of an anchor), when the general safety is not in question, and which falls on the owner of the particular property lost called more specifically particular average. (e) A contribution made by the owners of a ship's freight and cargo, in proportion to their several interests, to make good a loss that has been sustained or an expense incurred for the general safety of the ship and cargo. Thus, when for the safety of a ship in distress any destruction of property is incurred, either by cutting away the masts, throwing goods overboard, or in other ways, all persons who have goods on board or property in the ship (or the insurance) contribute to the loss according to their average, that is, according to the proportionate value of the goods of each on board. Average in this use is also called general average. 2 A sum or quantity intermediate to a number of different sums or quantities, obtained by adding them together and dividing the result by the number of quantities added; an arithmetical mean proportion. Thus, if four persons lose respectively $10, $20, $30, and $40, the average loss by the four is $25. Hence — 3. Any medial amount, estimate, or general statement based on a comparison of a number of diverse specific cases, a medium

The bilimbi, A. bilimbi, is often pickled or candied, and its juice removes the stain of iron rust and other spots from linen. The carambola, A. carambola, is also used as food.

Averroism, Averroism (av-e-ró'izm), n [Averrhoes + -ism.] The doctrines held by Averrhoes and his followers. See Averroist.

The patrons of Venice and the lecturers of Padua made Averroism synonymous with doubt and criticism in theology, and with sarcasm against the hierarchy.

Encyc Brit, III, 151

Averroist, Averroist (av-e-ró'ist), n [Averrhoes or Averroes + -ist] Averroes is a Latinized form of Ar Ibn-Rohd. A follower of Averrhoes, a celebrated Arabian philosopher and commentator on Aristotle, who was born at Cordova about A. D. 1126, and died 1198. The philosophy of the Averroists was little more than an imperfect interpretation of Aristotle's doctrine, but Averroism was particularly characterized by its effort to separate philosophy and religion.

Averroistic (av'e-ró-is'tik), a [Averroist + -ic] Of or pertaining to the Averroists or their doctrines.

The Averroistic school, mainly composed of physicists and naturalists, was the most decided opponent of the scholastic system in its relation to theology.

Aves (á-vér's), n. pl. [L. pl. of avis, a bird, cf. Skt. vṛ = Zend. vr, a bird. Cf. also ovum and egg.] Birds, feathered animals, considered as a class of vertebrates, next after mammals, sometimes united with Reptilia in a superclass Sauropsida, distinguished on the one hand from Mammalia, and on the other from Ichthyopsida, or amphibians and fishes together. Aves are defined by the following characteristics: a body covered with feathers, a kind of exoskeleton no other animals possess, hot blood completely double circulation perfectly 4 chambers of heart, single and dextral aortic arch, fixed lungs, air passages prolonged into various air sacs, even into the interior of some of the bones of the skeleton, oviparous reproduction, eggs large and meroblastic, with copious food yolk and albumen and a hard calcareous shell, limbs 4 in number, the anterior pair of which are modified as wings, and generally subserve flight by means of their large feathers, the distal segment of the limb being compressed and reduced, with not more than 4 digits, usually not unguitate, the metacarpals more or less ankylosed as a rule, and the five carpals normally only 2 in adult life, a large breast bone usually carinate, and great pectoral muscles, numerous dorsolumbar, sacral, and urocaudal vertebrae ankylosed into a sacrum, ilia greatly produced forward, and ilia and ischia backward, normally without median symphysis, perforate cotyloid cavity, the trochanter of the femur articulating with an iliac antitrochanter, and the fibula incomplete below, the astragalus ankylosed with the tibia, and assisting in forming the tibial condyles, mediotarsal ankle joint not more than 4 metatarsals, 3 ankylosed together, and not more than 4 digits, the phalanges of which are usually 2, 3, 4, or 5 in number, the hind limb fitted as a whole for bipedal locomotion, and no teeth in any recent forms, the jaws being sheathed in horn. Birds have undergone little modification since their first appearance in the Jurassic age, their classification is consequently difficult, and no leading authorities agree in detail. Linnaeus (1766) divided them into 6 orders: Accipitres, Prae, Avseres, Grallae, Gallinae, and Passeres (under an arrangement (1817) was similar, with the 6 orders Accipitres, Passeres, Sauropes, Gallinae, Grallae, and Palmipedes. A system said to have been originally proposed by Kirby, and formerly much in vogue among English ornithologists, recognized Scapiformes, Gralliformes, Cuculiformes, Sauropes, Sauropes, Passeres, and Palmipedes as orders. The latest artificial system is that of Quoy and Gaimard (1825-3), with the orders Oscines, Coluinae, Accipitres, Gallinae, Gralliformes, Natales, Proceres, and Sauropes, 42 subordinate groups, and 1,239 genera. In 1867 Huxley divided birds into 8 orders: Sauropes, Ratites, and Carnatae, the latter into 4 suborders, Dromaeognathae, Scolymognathae, Dromaeognathae, and Anthracoptera, and 16 superfamily groups—an arrangement very different from any preceding one. The discovery of Odontornithes, or toothed birds, led to another primary division by Mant into Odontornithes, Odontornithes, and Sauropes, this author not extending his classification to recent birds. In 1884 Coues divided all birds into 5 subclasses: (1) Sauropes, with 14th, amphicalous vertebrae, carinate sternum, separate metacarpals, and long, lizard-like tail; (2) Odontornithes, with socketed teeth, bilobed vertebrae, carinate sternum, ankylosed metacarpals, and short tail; (3) Odontocoe, with teeth in grooves of heterocercous vertebrae, rudimentary wings, tailfeather sternum and short tail; (4) Ratites, without teeth, with heterocercous vertebrae, rudimentary wings, ankylosed metacarpals, and short tail; (5) Carnatae, with out teeth with heterocercous vertebrae, carinate sternum, developed wings, ankylosed metacarpals, and short tail. The Carnatae include all living birds, except the few struthion or ratite birds. For the carinate subclass or order, some 15 or 20 ordinal or subordinal groups are now usually adopted. One of these, Passeres, includes a large majority of all birds. The genera or subgenera of birds in use now range from about 1,200 to about 2,900. The species are usually estimated at about 10,000. See bird and Sauropes.

E averdepois, averduois, haverduois, -poise, < ME aver de pois, avoir de pois, aver de pes, avoir de pes (equiv. to ML averna ponderis), lit goods of weight: aver, goods (see aver?); de, < L. de, of; pes, pens, later pois (mod F poids, by mistaken reference to L pondus, weight) = Pr. pes, pens = It. peso, < L. pensum, weight, < pendere, weigh: see poise, pendant.*] 1. A system of weight in which one pound contains 16 ounces. It was introduced into England from Bayonne about A. D. 1300, and is substantially the Spanish system. In avoirduois weight 7,000 troy grains (formerly, and now in the United States, approximately, but in Great Britain exactly) make a pound, while in troy weight the pound contains 5,760 grains, the grain being the same in both cases, hence, 175 pounds troy are equal to 144 pounds avoirduois. The pound avoirduois is the standard weight of Great Britain, and is equal to 453.6 grains in the French metric system. Avoirduois weight is used in determining the weights of all commodities except gems and the precious metals. It is reckoned as follows

	Cwt	Qrs	Pounds	Ounces	Drams
1 ton	= 20	= 80	= 2240	= 35840	= 573440
1 hundredweight	= 4	= 112	= 1792	= 28672
1 quart		= 28	= 448	= 7168
1 pound			= 16	= 256
1 ounce				= 16

In the United States the hundredweight is now commonly 100 pounds, and the ton 2,000 pounds, called the short ton in distinction from the long ton of 2,240 pounds

2 The weight of anything according to the avoirduois system as, his avoirduois was 150 pounds [Colloq.]

= Syn. 5 and 6. Awkward, clumsy, ungainly, uncouth, bungling, unhandy, inept, unskilful, inept, lubberly, uncourtly, inelegant, constrained, clownish. Awkward is generally applied to want of ease and grace or skill in bodily movement, especially of the arms or legs as, an awkward gait, awkward in the use of a tool. Clumsy starts from the notion of heaviness, and consequent unskillfulness or awkwardness in use, it is applicable to the whole body or to any part of it, even when still as, a clumsy figure, clumsy hands. This difference is also found in the figurative use of the words. A clumsy excuse is one that is put together badly, an awkward excuse is one that may be good, but is not gracefully presented. Ungainly, literally unhandy, not pleasing to the eye, is applied generally to awkwardness of appearance. Uncouth, literally unknown, uncommon, and so, by a bit of human conceit, unskilled, untrained, unrefined, sometimes even rude, barbarous as, uncouth phrases, manners. Bungling, awkward in doing, handling awkwardly, spoiling by awkwardness, in either literal or figurative use as, he made bungling work of it.

as a weapon of offense. The modern ax consists of a head of iron, with an arching edge of steel, and a helve or handle. The edge is in the plane of the sweep of the tool, thus differing from the adze, in which the edge is at right angles to the plane of the sweep.

As a weapon, the ax was in very common use from the earliest times until the general adoption of firearms. It was used by the Egyptians. By the Greeks it was looked upon as a weapon of their own ancestors and of the Asiatic nations, and so figured in works of Greek art. The northern nations who overthrew the Roman empire used many varieties of this weapon, and its use prevailed throughout the middle ages in Europe. A light ax was common among the Arabs and Moors. Axes of various kinds of stone, or entirely of copper or bronze, are found among prehistoric and ancient remains, and in use by barbarous races. See cell.—An ax to grind (in allusion to a story told by Franklin), some private purpose to subvert, or selfish end to attain.—Bullhead ax, a pole ax with a small hammer-head at the back, used in slaughter houses.

axitch, n. [Also written axitch, axfitch, < ax + itch.] Thus and the other names axseed, axwort, hatchet-itch, and NL Securigera, refer to the ax-shaped seed. A leguminous plant, Securigera coronilla (Cotgrave).

ax-form (aks'fôrm), a. Same as ax-shaped.

ax-head (aks'hêd), n. The head or iron of an ax. Ancient ax-heads, formed of stone and sometimes of bronze, are called celts.

axial (ak'si-al), a [< axis + -al] 1 Pertaining to or of the nature of an axis.

From central development we pass insensibly to that higher kind of development for which axial seems the most appropriate name. H. Spencer, Prin. of Biol., § 50

2. Situated in an axis or in the axis.—3. In anat., pertaining to the somatic as distinguished from the menbral portions of the body, not appendicular. Axial parts or organs are, in general, divided into epaxial, hypaxial, and paraxial, according as they are situated over, under, or alongside the spinal column.

4. In geol., forming the axis, central dominating portion, or crest of a mountain-range.

Section of mountain showing anticlinal structure with axial mass of eruptive or metamorphic rock

The central or axial portions of many mountain ranges consist of crystalline, axial, or arch mean rocks, this is especially true of the numerous ranges of the North American Cordillera.

Sometimes axial.

Axial canal, in crinoids, the central canal within the hard perisoma of the stem, extending the length of the latter and filled with a soft solid substance.—Axial cavity, in Actinostrea, the cavity common to the gastric sac and intramembranous chambers. See Actinostrea.—Axial circle, a circle having its center on the axis of a curve.—Axial line, the name given by Faraday to the line in which the magnetic force passes from one pole of a horse shoe magnet to the other.—Axial plane, in crystal, a plane containing (1) two of the crystallographic axes, or (2) the optic axis in the case of a biaxial crystal.—Axial rotation, rotation upon an axis.—Axial skeleton, the skeleton of the trunk and head and tail, as distinct from the skeleton of the limbs.

axially (ak'si-al), adv. In a line with or in the direction of the axis, with reference to the axis.

There are many Transparent Objects, however, whose peculiar features can only be made out when they are viewed by light transmitted through them obliquely instead of axially. W. B. Carpenter, Micros., § 145 axiferous (ak-sif'ê-rus), a [< L. axis, axis, + ferre = E. bear]. In bot., consisting of an axis only, without leaves or other appendages applied by Turpin to fungi and algae, considered as consisting essentially of an axis merely.

axiform (ak'si-fôrm), a [< L. axis, axis, + forma, shape]. In the form of an axis.

axil (ak'sil), n. [< L. axilla, dim (cf. ala for axla, dim) of axis, axis, armpit. See ala, axile, axil, and axle.] 1 The armpit, or axilla (which see).

axile (ak'sil), a [L as if axilla, < axis · see axis·] 1. Of or belonging to an axis or the axis; axial — 2 Situated in an axis or the axis, as an embryo which lies in the axis of a seed.

A large sinus, which separates the axile portion of the stem of the proboscis from its investing coat
Huxley, Anat. Invert, p. 555

3 In zoöl, axial, with reference to ovarian organs or ova opposed in this sense to peripheral

This mass becomes differentiated into an axile cord of protoplasmic substance: the thuchis, and peripheral masses, which are the developing ova
Huxley, Anat. Invert, p. 548

axilla (ak-sil'ä), n, pl. axillæ (-ä) [L · see axil] In anat, the armpit; a region of the body in the recess between the upper arm (or in birds the upper part of the wing) and the side of the chest beneath the shoulder. It is pyramidal in shape, its apex corresponding to the interval between the scapular muscles opposite the first rib — Axilla thermometer, a clinical thermometer so named because it is placed in the axilla in observing the temperature of a person axillant (ak-sil'ant), a [axil + -ant·] Forming an axil, as a leaf with another leaf in whose axil it is [Rare]

For him the tree is a colony of phytons, each being a bud with its axillant leaf and fraction of the stem and root Encyc. Brit, XVI 841

axillar (ak-sil-lär), a and n [L axillaris, < L axilla, axil see axil] 1. a Same as axillary

II. n In ornith, one of the under wing-coverts of a bird, growing from the axilla or armpit, and distinguished from the under coverts in general by being the innermost feathers lining the wing, lying close to the body, and almost always longer, stiffer, and narrower than the rest. Commonly used in the plural axillary (ak-sil-lär), a and n. [As axillar see -ar·, -ary·] I. a 1 In anat, pertaining to the axilla, contained in the axilla. as, the axillary boundaries, the axillary vessels — 2 In the arthropod animals, pertaining to an articulation or joint said of parts which are attached to the point of union of two joints or other movable parts of the body. — 3 In bot, pertaining to or growing from the axil (of plants) See cut under axil — Axillary arches, in anat muscular slips which sometimes pass from the latissimus dorsi (broadest muscle of the back), near its insertion, across the axilla to terminate in the tendon of the pectoralis major (greater pectoral muscle), in the coraco-brachialis, or otherwise — Axillary artery, the continuation of the subclavian artery, after it has passed the lower border of the first rib, as far as the lower border of the axilla, where it takes the name of brachial artery. It is divided into three portions, that above, that behind and that below the pectoralis minor (smaller pectoral) muscle, and gives off numerous branches, thoracic, subscapular, and circumflex — Axillary feathers, in ornith, the axillars See axillar, n — Axillary nerve, the circumflex nerve of the arm — Axillary vein, in anat, the continuation through the axilla of the basilic vein reinforced by the vena comites of the brachial artery and other veins, and ending in the subclavian

II. n Same as axillar.

axine (ak'sin), a, and n [axine· + -ine·] I. a (Of or pertaining to the group of deer of which the axis, or spotted Indian hog-deer, is the type

II. n. A deer of the axine group axinite (ak'si-nit), n [Gr ἀξινίτης, ax (see ax·), + -inē·] A mineral occurring commonly in crystals, whose general form is that of a very oblique rhomb, so flattened that some of its edges become thin and sharp like the edge of an ax (whence its name), also sometimes found in lamellar masses. It is a silicate of aluminium, iron, and manganese and calcium, with 6 per cent of boron trioxide, and is commonly of a clove brown or plum blue color axinomaney (ak'sin- or ak-sin'ō-man-si), n. [L axinomania, < Gr ἀξινόμανία, < ἀξινίς, ax, + μανία, divination see Mantis] An ancient kind of divination for the detection of crime by means of an ax or axes. One form consisted in joining an ax on a bar, and repeating the names of persons suspected. If the ax moved at the name of any one, he was pronounced guilty. For another form, see extract.

[Jet] was more over employed in the form of divination called axinomaney. Laid on a hatchet made hot, it was stated not to consume if the desires of the consulting party were destined to be fulfilled Archæologia, XLIII 517 (Davies Sup. Gloss)

axinometry, n. See axonometry
axiolite (ak-si-ō-lit), n. [L axis, axis, + Gr λίθος, stone] An aggregation of rudimentary crystal-fibers and products of devitrification, occurring in certain rocks like rhyolite. Axio-lites resemble spherulites, except that their arrangement is divergent from a line instead of from a point Axiolite — Specimen of rhyolite from Virginia Range, Nevada, magnified 200 diameters.

(From Zirkel's "Microscopical Photography")

axiolitic (ak'si-ō-lit'ik), a. Of, pertaining to, or of the nature of axiolite.

axiom (ak'si-om), n. [L axioma, < Gr ἀξίωμα, that which is thought fit, a requisite, that which a pupil is required to know beforehand, a self-evident principle, < ἀξιόω, think fit or worthy, require, demand, < ἀξίος, worthy, fit, lit weighing as much as, of like value, < ἀγαν, drive, lead, also weigh, = L agere, drive, do, etc. see act, v, agent, etc.] 1. A self-evident, undemonstrable, theoretical, and general proposition to which every one who apprehends its meaning must assent. The Greek word was probably applied by Plato (though it does not occur in his dialogues in this sense) to certain first premises of mathematics, and this continues to be the ordinary use of the term. It was extended by Aristotle to similar principles supposed to underlie other branches of knowledge. The axioms or "common notions" of Euclid, as given in English translations, are twelve in number, viz (1) Things which are equal to the same are equal to one another (2) If equals be added to equals, the wholes are equal (3) If equals be taken from equals, the remainders are equal (4) If equals be added to unequals, the wholes are unequal (5) If equals be taken from unequals, the remainders are unequal (6) Things which are double of the same are equal to one another (7) Things which are halves of the same are equal to one another (8) Magnitudes which coincide with one another, that is, which exactly fill the same space, are equal to one another (9) The whole is greater than its part (10) Two straight lines cannot enclose a space (11) All right angles are equal to one another (12) If a straight line meet two straight lines, so as to make the two interior angles on the same side of it taken together less than two right angles, these straight lines, being continually produced, shall at length meet upon that side on which the angles which are less than two right angles. Only the first three of these are universally acknowledged to be authentic, though the latest editor, Heiberg, allows the eighth and ninth also. Euclid gives besides a list of postulates, which, as given in English translations, are (1) Let it be granted that a straight line may be drawn from any point to any other point (2) That a terminated straight line may be produced to any length in a straight line (3) And that a circle may be described from any center, at any distance from that center. What the English editions give as the thirteenth and twelfth axioms formed originally the fourth and fifth postulates, and in the best MS the tenth axiom appears as the sixth postulate. It would thus seem that he understood by "postulate" a geometrical principle which was asked to be taken for granted, and by "axiom" or "common notion," a not specially geometrical principle with the use of which the learner would be already familiar. This agrees with Aristotle's definition of an axiom as a principle which he who would learn must bring of himself. The Leibnizians distinguish a postulate as a self-evident practical principle from an axiom as a self-evident theoretical principle. According to Kant, an axiom is a necessary and general synthetic proposition which declares a property of pure space or time and rests directly on intuition, and is thus self-evident. He refused the name to the genuine "common notions" of Euclid, holding these to be analytical propositions. Modern mathematicians seem to regard the axioms of geometry as an analysis of the independent properties of space, so that the longer the list, provided the propositions are really independent, the more perfectly has the design been fulfilled. Many eminent mathematicians hold that there is no reason to think these axioms to be exactly true, but that they must be assumed to be slightly erroneous one way or the other, although experience shows that they approximate so nearly to the truth that it may be doubted whether it will ever be possible to measure the amount of their error. A similar doctrine is held by some thinkers concerning metaphysical axioms, such as the axiom that every event is determined by causes.

2. Any higher proposition, obtained by generalization and induction from the observation of individual instances; the enunciation of a general fact; an empirical law. This use originated with Bacon, influenced probably by the employment of axiom by the Stoics to mean any proposition. 3. In logic, a proposition, whether true or false: a use of the term which originated with Zeno the Stoic. — Syn. 1 Maxim, Trichem, etc. See Aphorism axiomatic (ak'si-ō-mat'ik), a. [Gr ἀξιοματικός, < ἀξιόω, think fit, = L agere, drive, do, etc. see act, v, agent, etc.] 1. Of the nature of an axiom, self-evident truth, or received principle; self-evident.

Many controversies arise touching the axiomatic character of the law
See W. Hamilton, Logic, I. 88

2. Full of axioms or maxims; aphoristic.

The most axiomatic of English poets.

Southey, Doctor, p. 281

axiomatic (ak'si-ō-mat'ik-al), a. 1. Of the nature of an axiom; axiomatic. — 2. Of or pertaining to axioms or received first principles. as, "materials of axiomatic knowledge." Bolingbroke — 3. In logic, of, pertaining to, or of the nature of a proposition, whether true or false.

axiomatically (ak'si-ō-mat'ik-al-i), adv. In an axiomatic manner. (a) By the use of axioms; as an axiom or axiomatic truth. (b) In logic, in the form of a simple proposition. See axiom, 3.
axiometer (ak-si-om'ē-ter), n. [L axis, axis, + metrum, a measure.] An instrument for showing the position of the tiller of a vessel which uses a steering-wheel.

axiologist (ak'si-ō-pis-ti), n. [Gr ἀξιολογία, < ἀξιόω, trustworthy, < ἀξίος, worthy, + λόγος, verbal adj. of πείθεσθαι, trust, believe.] Worthiness to be believed; trustworthiness axis (ak'sis), n; pl. axes (-sēs). [L axis, axis, pole of the earth, poet, the heavens; also, a board or plank (see axler); = AS. ax, E. ax, axle; see ax·, axle·] 1. The motionless, or relatively motionless, imaginary line about which a rotating body, such as the earth, turns: specifically called in this sense the axis of revolution or rotation (which see, below).
Imp. Dict

On their own axis as the planets run,
Yet make at once their circle round the sun.
Pope, Essay on Man, iii. 318.

2. The axle of a wheel; the cylindrical portion of any mechanical piece intended to turn in bearings: as, the axis of a transit instrument.
The weightiness of the wheels doth settle it upon his Axis
Fotherby, Atheomastix, xi §1 (N E D)

3 In anat. (a) The second cervical vertebra so called because the atlas turns upon it as about a pivot or axis, bearing the head with it

a body, b odontoid process, c articular surface for atlas; d foramen for vertebral artery; e superior articular surface; f superior process; g inferior articular surface; h transverse process.

It is usually distinguished from the other vertebrae by having an odontoid or tooth like process, furnishing the pivot about which the atlas turns: hence called the toothed vertebra (vertebra dentata), or the odontoid vertebra (vertebra odontoides). (b) The odontoid process of the axis (c) The entire vertebral column. (d) The central or axial nervous system of a vertebrate: as, the cerebrospinal axis. (e) The columella or modiolus of the cochlea. (f) A short thick artery which immediately divides into several branches: as, the celiac axis, the thyroid axis (g) The axis-cylinder of a nerve (h) Same as axon — 4. The central line of a solid of revolution, the central line of any symmetrical, or nearly symmetrical, body. as, the axis of a cylinder, of the eye, etc. — 5 Any line with reference to which the physical properties of a body, especially its elasticity, are symmetrical. — 6 In Trilobites, specifically, the tergum; the median convex portion of a thoracic somite, intervening between the pleura or flattened lateral portions of the thorax. See cut under Trilobites. — 7. In conch, the imaginary line or space around which the whorls of a spiral shell turn. — 8. In bot, the stem, the central part or longitudinal support on which organs or parts are arranged. The root has sometimes been called the descending axis. A. Gray.

In many cases the floral axis is prolonged beyond one or more circles of floral organs, and the stem again assumes the ordinary leaf-bearing form.
Science, III, 302.

9. In geog. and geol., the central or dominating region of a mountain-chain, or the line which follows the crest of a range and thus indicates the position of the most conspicuous portion of the uplift. In a folded region, or one in which the strata have been bent into anticlinal and synclinal, the axis of each fold is the plane indicating the direction parallel to which the folding has taken place, or toward which the strata incline.

10. In analytical geom., any fixed line of reference used to determine the position of a point or series of points (line, surface) in space. — Anticlinal axis, in geol. See anticlinal. — Axes of an ellipsoid, its maximum and minimum diameters and the diameter perpendicular to these. — Axes of coordinates, or ordinate axes, in analytical geom., fixed lines on which or parallel to which an element (abscissa or ordinate) of the position of a point is measured. — Axes of light-elasticity, the three directions at right angles to one another in a biaxial crystal in which the elasticity of the light-ether has its maximum, minimum, and mean value. In a trimetric (orthorhombic) crystal they coincide with the crystallographic axes, in a monoclinic crystal one coincides with the orthodiagonal axis, the others lie in the plane of symmetry. In a triclinic crystal there is no necessary relation between the two sets of axes. — Axis of a beam of light, the middle ray of the beam. — Axis of a cone, a straight line drawn from the vertex to the center of the base. — Axis of a conic, a diameter perpendicular to the chords it bisects. — Axis of a crystal, in crystal, one of three or four imaginary lines assumed for convenience to define the position of the planes of the crystal, and to exhibit its symmetry. See crystallography. — Axis of a curve, a right line dividing it into two symmetrical parts, so as to bisect every chord perpendicular to it, as in a parabola, ellipse, or hyperbola. — Axis of a cylinder, a straight line drawn from the center of the one end to that of the other. — Axis of affinity, the axis of homology of figures homological by affinity. — Axis of a gun or piece, the middle line of the bore of the gun. — Axis of a lens, a straight line drawn through the optical center of the lens, and perpendicular to both its surfaces. — Axis of a magnet, the imaginary line which connects the north and south poles of the magnet. — Axis of a sphere, any straight line drawn through the center and terminated both ways by the surface of the sphere. — Axis of a spherical, concave, or convex mirror, a straight line which passes through the geometrical and optical centers of the mirror. — Axis of a telescope, a straight line passing through the centers of all the glasses in the tube. — Axis of collimation, in math., a line which corresponds to itself in a projective transformation. — Axis of direct elasticity, a direction in a solid body such that a longitudinal strain in that direction produces a stress precisely opposed to the strain. — Axis of elasticity, a direction in a solid body with respect to which some kind of symmetry exists in the relation of strains and stresses. — Axis of homology, the line upon which corresponding lines of two figures in homology intersect each other. — Axis of oscillation of a pendulum, a right line passing through the center about which it vibrates, and perpendicular to the plane of vibration. — Axis of perspective, the line in which the plane of a perspective representation cuts any plane represented. — Axis of reflection, in the method of inversion in geometry, any line considered as perpendicular to and bisecting the distance between two inverse points. — Axis of refraction, a straight line drawn perpendicular to the surface of the refracting medium, through the point of incidence of the refracted ray. Some crystals have two axes of refraction. — Axis of rotation, the imaginary line about which all the parts of a rotating body turn. — Axis of similitude of three circles, a line passing through two intersections of corresponding pairs of common tangents of two pairs out of the three circles. The axis of similitude also necessarily passes through a third such point, but this fact is not essential to its definition. — Axis of symmetry, a line on both or all sides of which the parts of a body or magnitude are symmetrically disposed. — Axis of the earth, the straight line connecting its two poles, and about which it performs its diurnal rotation. — Axis of the eye, a straight line passing through the centers of the pupil and crystalline lens. — Optic axis. — Axis of the optic capital, a line passing perpendicularly through the middle of the eye of the volute. — Axis of the world, the imaginary axis passing through the celestial poles. — Axis of vision. See visual axis. — Basalocranial axis, a straight line drawn from a point midway between the occipital condyles, through the median plane of the skull, to the junction of the ethmoid and prephenoid, in the floor of the cerebral cavity. — Basalocranial axis. See basalocranial axis. — Basifacial axis, or facial axis, a straight line drawn from the anterior extremity of the premaxilla to the anterior extremity of the basiscranial axis (which see, above) not to be confused with facial line. See transverse axis, and cut under transverse axis. — Basifacial axis. (a) A short, thick branch of the abdominal aorta, given off just below the diaphragm, and immediately dividing into the gastric, hepatic, and splenic arteries. (b) The sympathetic plexus which surrounds this artery. — Cerebrospinal axis. See cerebrospinal axis. — Conjugate or minor axis, in geom., an axis, especially of a hyperbola, perpendicular to the transverse axis. The term was originally used in the plural for a pair of conjugate diameters at right angles to each other. As now used, it is an abbreviated expression for axis conjugate to the transverse axis. — Facial axis. See basifacial

axis, above. — Harmonic axis. See harmonic. — Instantaneous axis, the axis about which a body is rotating at any instant, an expression applicable when motion is considered in only two dimensions or when a point of the body is fixed, in other cases it would be an inaccurate abbreviation of the following. — Instantaneous sliding axis, that line about which a body is rotating and along which it is simultaneously sliding at any instant. Every rigid body at every instant of its motion has such an instantaneous sliding axis. — Macrodiagonal axis, magnetic axis. See the adjective. — Neural axis, in anat., the cerebrospinal axis, the axis or central trunk of the cerebrospinal system. — Neutral axis, in mech. (a) Of a beam, the plane in which the tensile and compressing forces terminate, and in which the stress is therefore nothing. (b) Of a deflected bar, the line along which there is neither extension nor compression. — Optic axis, the axis of the eye (which see, above). — Orthogonal or principal metatatic axes, three axes in a body such that, if a cube be cut out having its faces normal to these axes, and if there be a linear elongation along one of them and an equal linear compression along a second, no tangential stress will result round the third axis on planes normal to the first two. — Radial axis of two circles, the line joining their points of intersection. This line is real even when the circles do not really intersect, the difference of its distance from the two centers being proportional to the difference of the areas of the two circles. — Spiral axis, in arch., the axis of a twisted column spirally drawn in order to trace the circumvolutions without. — Synclinal axis, in geol. See synclinal. — Tectonic axes, in crystal, the lines along which the minute crystals are arranged in the formation of a complex crystalline growth. Thus, dendritic crystallizations of gold and copper often branch at angles of 60°, their directions being parallel to the sides of an octahedral face. — The principal axes of inertia of a body, those lines passing through its center of mass about which its moments of inertia are a maximum and a minimum, together with the third line perpendicular to these at their intersection. — The principal axes of stress in a body, the directions of the three conjugate normal stresses. — Thyroid axis, a short, thick branch from the subclavian artery, dividing almost immediately into the inferior thyroid, suprascapular, and transversalis colli. — Transverse or major axis, in conic sections, the diameter which passes through the foci. In the ellipse it is the longest diameter, in the hyperbola it is the shortest, and in the parabola it is, like all the other diameters, infinite in length. — Visual axis, in physiol. the straight line passing through the center of the pupil and the middle of the macula lutea. It does not coincide with the optic axis. Also called visual line or axis of vision. — Zone axis. See zone.

axis² (ak'sis), n. [L. axis (Phny), perhaps of E. Ind. origin] 1. A kind of East Indian deer, Cervus axis, of which there are several varieties, perhaps species. The body is spotted with white. Also called axis-deer, spotted deer, and hog-deer. — 2. [cap.] [NL.] A genus of such deer. Ham Smith, 1827 axis-cylinder (ak'sis-sil'in-dēr), n. In anat., the central part of a nerve-fiber, the core of white nerve-tissue in a nerve-fiber. It is the essential part of the nerve and is the only part found at its origin and termination. In cross section a bundle of nerve fibers appears like a bunch of lead pencils, the axis cylinder corresponding to the lead. Also called band-axis and axis band.

axisymmetric (ak'sis-si-met'rik), a. Symmetrical with reference to an axis.

axle (ak'sl), n. [Early mod. E. also axel, axell, axle, < ME axel, axil (chiefly in comp. axel-tree, q. v.), not in AS, where only the primitive ax, car occurs. The pin or spindle on which a wheel revolves, or which forms the axis of the wheel and revolves with it. Properly, the axle of a carriage, cart, or wagon wheel is the round arm of the axle-tree or axle bar which is inserted in the hub or nave, but the name is sometimes extended to the whole axle-tree.

2†. An axis, as of the earth

Whether
He [the sun] from the east his flaming road begin,
Or she [the earth] from west her silent course advance,
With inoffensive pace that spinning sleeps
Milton, P. L., viii 166

Axle stop-key, a plate upon the end of the axle of a railroad car, intended to prevent excessive lateral motion and to take the wear. — Blind axle, an axle that does not communicate power, a dead axle. — Colling axle, in coach building, an axle the box of which is secured upon the arm by two nuts screwed right and left. — Compound axle, an axle having two parts connected by a sleeve or some other locking arrangement. — Dead axle, one which does not impart motion, a blind axle opposed to a live axle or driving axle. — Dipping axle, in coach building, bending the end of the axle so that the wheel shall strike squarely upon the ground. — Driving axle, in locomotive engines, the axle which receives the power from the steam-piston transmitted through the piston rod and connecting rod. The rear end of the latter is connected either with cranks formed in this axle, or more generally with crank pins upon the driving-wheels at its ends —

Leading axle, in British locomotives, an axle of a wheel in front of the driving wheels. — Mail axle, in coach-building, an axle which is secured by a plate at its back instead of a nut on the end.

The commonest kind of oil axle is called the mail, because the peculiar mode of fastening was first used in the mail coaches. J. W. Burgess, Coach Building, p. 72

Telescopic axle, an extension axle which permits the running wheels of a railroad-car to be slipped in or out, thus making them adaptable to tracks of different gauge. — Trailing axle, the rear axle of a locomotive. In English engines it is usually placed under the foot plate.

axle-adjuster (ak'sl-a-jus'tēr), n. A machine for straightening axles, a machine used in giving to the spindle its proper line of direction relatively to the axletree.

axle-arm (ak'sl-arm), n. The spindle on the end of an axle on which the box of the wheel slips, or one of the two pivots on which the axle itself turns. See second cut under axle-box.

axle-bar (ak'sl-bār), n. The bar of an axletree.

axle-block (ak'sl-blok), n. The block placed upon the axle of a vehicle to form a seat for the spring when it is depressed.

axle-box (ak'sl-boks), n. The box which contains the bearings for the spindle of an axle, or the journal of an axle, as of a carriage-wheel, a railroad-car wheel, etc., the bushing or metal lining of the hub which forms the rotatory bearing of the axle of a vehicle.

Axle-box guides, the guides for the brasses of an axle box. — Radial axle-box, in a railroad car, a sliding axle box so arranged that, with its fellow, it maintains the axle in a position radial to the curve of the track, however its direction may change.

axle-clip (ak'sl-klip), n. A clevis or bow which unites some other part of a vehicle to the axle. — Axle-clip tie, the cross bar which joins the ends of the bow clip (which see).

axle-collar (ak'sl-kol'ār), n. The collar on an axle which receives the lateral pressure from the wheel or bearing.

axled (ak'sld), a. Furnished with an axle or with axles.

axle-gage (ak'sl-gāj), n. A wheelwright's instrument for giving to the spindle of an axle its proper swing and gather.

axle-guard (ak'sl-gārd), n. Those parts of a railroad-car in which the axle-box plays vertically under the yield and reaction of the car-springs. — Axle-guard stays, the iron rods or straps which are bolted to the frame and to all the ends of the axle guards, to strengthen them.

axle-hook (ak'sl-hūk), n. A hook in front of the axle of a carriage, to which is attached the stay-chain connecting the axle and the double-tree.

axle-nut (ak'sl-nut), n. A screw-nut fitted to the end of the arm of an axle to keep the wheel in place.

axle-packing (ak'sl-pak'ing), n. The guard or material placed about an axle to exclude dust.

axle-pin (ak'sl-pin), n. Same as linch-pin.

axle-saddle (ak'sl-sad'l), n. A saddle-shaped clip, used in securing a spring to an axle.

axle-seat (ak'sl-sēt), n. The hole in a railroad-car wheel which receives the arm of the axle.

axle-skein (ak'sl-skān), n. A band, strip, or thimble of metal placed on a wooden axle-arm to prevent the wood from wearing rapidly.

axle-sleeve (ak'sl-slēv), n. A sleeve placed round a railroad-car axle in order to hold up the ends should the axle be broken.

axle-tooth (ak'sl-tōth), n. [E. dial, also asle, asle, asal-tooth, early mod. E. axel, axil-tooth, < late ME. axyltothe (= Dan. axel-land); < axel* (Shetland axle) (< Icel. axl = Norw. jaksle, jaksle = Sw. dial. jakkal, jaksal = Dan. axel), a jaw-tooth, grinder, + tooth.] A grinder; a molar. ayenbite, n. [ME., < ayen, again, + bite (a translation of LL. remorsus, remorse): see again and bite.] Remorse. [The "Ayenbite of Inwyt" (Remorse of Conscience) is the title of a well-known old English religious work adapted from the French.]

ayenee (ä-ye-né'), n. [E. Ind.] Angli-wood (which see).

ayenst, ayenst, prep. Obsolete forms of against.

ayenward, adv. An obsolete form of againstward.

ayenyetst, n. [ME., < ayen, again, back, + yefte, gift: see again and gift.] A recompense. Ayenbite of Inwyt

ay-green, aye-green (ä'grén), n. [ay + green. Cf. evergreen and sempervivens.] The houseleek, Sempervivum tectorum.

ayulest, n. An obsolete form of aglet.

aylet, ayelt, n. [ay + let, < AF ayle, OF ayel, aiol, F. aioul = Fr avio = Sp avio = It. avolo, < LL avolus*, dim of avus, for L avus, grandfather] A grandfather. See besayle.

ayr (är), n. [Sc., also air, < Icel. eyrr, mod eyri, the gravelly bank of a river, a small tongue of land running into the sea (= Sw. or = Dan. ore, seen in place-names, as in Elsmore, Dan Helsingör, Icel. as if Helsingja-eyrr*), < ayrr, clay, mud, = Norw. aur = AS edr, earth, ground, used also as the name of the runic character for ed.] An open sea-beach; a sand-bank. Also spelled air. [Scotch] ayrant (är'ant), a. [Also ayrant, a ppr form, < ME aire*, eyre, etc., ayry see *ayry*² and -ant.] In her, seated on its nest or ayry: said of a bird of prey when thus represented as a bearing.

Ayr stone. See stone.

ayuntamiento (ä-yón'tä-mi-en'tō), n. [Sp., < OSp ayuntar, < ML adjunctare*, < ad, to, + junctare* (> Sp. juntar, join), < L. jungere, pp junctus, join: see join. Cf junta.] In Spain and Spanish America, a corporation or body of magistrates in a city or town, a town council, usually composed of alcaides, regidores, and other municipal officers.

ay-word (ä'wörd), n. [A form, appar an error, appearing in some editions of Shakespeare, specifically in "Twelfth Night," is 3, where others give ayword, q. v.] A byword.

az. In her, an abbreviation of azure.

azale (ä-zä'l'), n. [Appar < azalea. Cf azaleum.] A coloring matter obtained by extracting "madder-flowers" with wood-naphtha at a boiling temperature. It is no longer used.

Azalea (ä-zä'lë-ä), n. [NL., < Gr αζαλεος, dry (in allusion to the dry habitat of the plant), < azein, dry up, parch.] 1. A genus of ericaceous plants, now referred to Rhododendron — 2. [l. c.] A plant or flower belonging to this genus. See Rhododendron — 3. [l. c.] A name of a species of plants of the genus Lotseleuria, the Alpine azalea, L. procumbens.

azalein (ä-zä'lë-in), n. [azalea + *-in*²] Same as rosaniline.

azan (ä-zän'), n. [Ar.] In Mohammedan countries, the call to public prayers, proclaimed by the crier from the minaret of the mosque.

When their crier, a small wizen faced man, began the Azan, we received it with a shout of derision, and some, hastily snatching up their weapons, offered him an opportunity of martyrdom. R. F. Burton, El Medinah, p. 133

azarin (az'ä-rin), n. A coal-tar color of the azo-group used in dyeing. It is applied only to cotton, and is fairly fast to light. It is a compound of naphthol-azo-dichlor phenol and ammonium bisulphite. It dyes a brilliant red inclining to crimson.

azarole (az'ä-röl), n. [Also acerole, < F. azarole, azerole = It. aserruolo = Sp. acerolo, azarolo = Pg. azarola (NL. azarolus), < Ar. az-zurür, < al, the, + zurür, azarole.] The Neapolitan medlar, a species of thorn, (rakegus Azarolus, which bears a rather large, pleasant fruit).

asedarach (ä-zed'ä-rak), n. [as + edarach = Sp. acedaraghe, prob through Ar., < Pers äzäd dirakht, lit free (noble) tree äzad, free, dirakht, tree.] 1. An ornamental East Indian tree, Melia Azedarach, cultivated in southern Europe and America, and also known as mad-tree, pride of Indus, etc. See Melia — 2. A drug, consisting of the bark of the root of the asedarach. It is an emetic and a cathartic, and is used as a vermifuge.

asiam (az'iam), n. [Russ azyamä.] A full long outside garment, without plaits, made of a coarse gray cloth, at Astrakhan, a sheep-skin coat covered with cloth. [Russian] azimuth (az'ä-muth), n. [az + muth, azimut, < (OF azmut = Sp azimut = Pg azimuth = It azimutto, < Ar as-simüt, < al, the, + sumut, pl. of samt, way or path, point or quarter of the horizon. From the same word is derived zenith, q. v.] In astron, an arc of the horizon intercepted between the meridian of a place and the vertical circle passing through the center of a celestial object. The azimuth and altitude of a star give its exact position in the sky.

Altitude and azimuth circle. See circle — Azimuth compass, a compass placed in some convenient part of a ship on the midship line, and provided with vanes, screws, and other apparatus for observing the bearings of heavenly and terrestrial objects — Azimuth dial, a dial whose style or gnomon is at right angles to the plane of the horizon. The shadow marks the sun's azimuth — Azimuth or vertical circles, great circles intersecting one another in the zenith and nadir, and cutting the horizon at right angles — Magnetic azimuth, an arc of the horizon intercepted between the azimuth or vertical circle passing through the center of any heavenly body and the magnetic meridian. This is found by observing the object with an azimuth compass.

azimuthally (az'ä-muth-al-i), adv. In the manner of an azimuth, in the direction of the azimuth.

Turning azimuthally in either direction

azo-. A curt form of azote in compounds. — Azo-compound, a compound intermediate between a nitro and an amido compound, made from the former by partial reduction, or from the latter by partial oxidation. — Azo-dyes, a well defined group of the coal tar colors, all containing the diazonic group — N=N-, bound on either side to a benzene radical. They may be prepared by reduction of the nitro compounds in alkaline solutions or by acting on diazo compounds with phenols or amines of the aromatic series. Simple azo compounds are for the most part brightly colored bodies, but they are not coloring matters, since they do not possess the property of combining with either acids or bases. The azo dyes are the amido or hydroxyl derivatives of simple azo compounds, and are distinguished as amidoazo and oxyazo dyes. In dyeing, the amidoazo dyes can either be used as such or in the form of their sulphonic acids, while the oxyazo dyes nearly always contain sulpho-groups.

azobenzene (az'ö-ben'zën), n. [azo + benzene] A crystalline substance, (C₆H₅)₂N₂, obtained by the action of reducing agents upon nitrobenzene. Also called azobenzol and azobenzide.

azobenzol (az'ö-ben'zöl), n. [azo + benzol.] Same as azobenzene.

azo-blue (az'ö-blë), n. A coal-tar color used for dyeing cotton, and fast to soap and acids. It is a dark blue powder soluble in water, and is formed by the action of tetraxal ditolyl chloride on beta naphthol sulpho-nate of potash.

azodiphenyl (ä'ö-dî-fen'il), n. Same as Coupler's blue (which see, under blue).

azo-erythrin (az'ö-e-rith'rin), n. [azo + erythrin.] A coloring principle obtained from the azobol of commerce.

All the different kinds of silver are called (in Mexico) azogue, or quicksilver. See Amer (N S), LVI 280 azoic (ä-zö'ik), a. [az + oic, lifeless, < az + oic, life, < az, < az, live.] Destitute of organic life in geol., applied to rocks which are destitute of any fossil remains or other evidence of the existence of life at the period of their deposition. The "azoic system" or series of Foster and Whitney includes the stratified rocks, together with the associated unstratified or massive ones, which underlie unconformably, or are otherwise shown to be older than, the Potomac sandstone, or the lowest group of rocks which has up to the present time been provided to contain traces of a former organic life.

The dredge was sent down at each successive station but with very poor result, and Dr Carpenter was driven to the conclusion that the bottom of the Mediterranean at depths beyond a few hundred fathoms is nearly azoic.

See C. W. Thomson, Depths of the Sea, p. 192

The enormously thick azone slaty and other rocks, which constitute the Laurentian and Cambrian formations may be to a great extent the metamorphosed products of former mineral life. Huxley, Anat. Invert, p. 82

azolitmin (az'ö-lit'min), n. [azo + litmin + *-in*²] A deep blood-red coloring matter obtained from litmus.

azonic (ä-zön'ik), a. [az + onic, confined to no zone or region, < az + onic, a zone.] Not confined to any particular zone or region, not local. Emerson azospermium (ä-zö-ö-spër'ma-tizm), n. [az + osperm, lifeless (see azote), + osperm (-), seed, + -ium] Same as azospermia.

azospermia (ä-zö-ö-spër'mi-ä), n. [NL. see azospermium.] In pathol., loss or diminution of vitality of the spermatozoa, or their absence from the semen.

azor (ä'zor), n. A kind of beaver cloth, made in Styria, Austria.

Azorian (ä-zö'ri-an), a and n. [az + orian, Pg. Agores, so named from the abundance of hawks or buzzards there, < Sp. azor, Pg. agor, a hawk: see Astur and austriger.] 1. A belonging or relating to the Azores, or to their inhabitants.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of the Azores, a group of islands situated in the Atlantic ocean about 800 miles west of Portugal, to which country they belong.

azorite (az'ö-rit), n. A mineral crystallizing in tetragonal crystals, found in a granitic rock in the Azores. Its chemical nature is doubtful, it may be identical with eucon.

azotate (ä-zö'tät), n. [azot + *-ate*¹] A compound formed by the union of nitric or azotic acid with a base; nitrate.

azote (az'öt), n. [= F. azote, < NL azotum, < Gr ä-priv + ζωω, assumed verbal adj of ζωω, var of ζωω, live.] A name formerly given to nitrogen, because it is unfit for respiration.

Lavoisier suggested the propriety of giving to this foul kind of air (air robbed of its oxygen) the name of Azote, a name which it still retains in France, but which has been superseded elsewhere by the term Nitrogen. Huxley, Phytolog, p. 79 azoted (az'öt-ed), a. [azote + *-ed*²] Nitrogenized.

As animals are fed on animal diet or on azoted substances. Atkin, Med Diet (Mh ed), II 1001 azoth (az'öth), n. [Also azot and azook, a corruption of the Ar. original of azogue, q. v.] 1. In alchemy, mercury, as the assumed first principle of all metals — 2. The universal specific or panacea of Paracelsus.

azotic (ä-zöt'ik), a. [azote + -ic] Pertaining to azote, fatal to animal life. — Azotic acid. Same as nitric acid. See nitric — Azotic gas, nitrogen, or nitrogen gas.

azotide (az'öt-id or -tid), n. [azote + *-ide*²] An azotized body. See azotized.

azotin (az'öt-in), n. [azote + *-in*²] An explosive compound consisting of 15.23 parts of carbon, 11.43 of sulphur, 69.05 of sulphuric acid, and 4.29 of petroleum.

azotize, azotized. See azotize, azotized.

azotite (az'öt-it), n. [azote + *-ite*²] A salt formed by a combination of nitrous acid with a base, synonymous with nitrite.

azotize (az'öt-tiz), v. t., pret and pp azotized, ppr azotizing. [azot + -ize] To nitrogenize. Also spelled azotise.

azotized (az'öt-tizd), p. a. Imbued with azote or nitrogen. Also spelled azotised.

It has been maintained, on the basis of carefully conducted experiments, that the amount of work done by an animal may be greater than can be accounted for by the ultimate metamorphosis of the azotized constituents of its food.

W. B. Carpenter, in Corr. and Conserv. of Forces, p. 431

Organic compounds which contain nitrogen are frequently termed azotized substances.

Azygobranchia (az'i-go-brang'ki-ā), n pl

[NL, < Gr ἀζυγος, not joined (see azygous), +

βράχια, gills] A division of streptoneurous gastropods, by which the Scutibranchia, the Ctenobranchia, and the Heteropoda are collectively contrasted with the Zygobranchia. See extract

All the remaining Gastropoda contrast with the Zygo- branchia in the fact that the torsion of the body has caused the obsolescence or abortion of one of the true gills, and for this reason Dr Lankester has arranged them under one ordinal head, Azygobranchia

Stand Nat Hist, l 322

azygobranchiate (az'i-gō-brang'ki-āt), a. [ML azygobranchia + -ate] Pertaining to or having the characters of the Azygobranchia

azygomatous (az-i-gom'a-tus), a [Gr a- priv (a-18) + zygomatē] Having no zygo-matia, destitute of zygomatic arches, as the skull of a shrew. Cowes

azygos (az'i-gos), n [Gr ἀζυγος, unpaired

see azygous] An azygous part, as a muscle, vein, etc. — Azygos pharynx, a small muscle arising from the pharyngeal spine of the basilar process of the occipital bone and lying along the middle line of the back of the pharynx and inserted into the raphe — Azy- gos uvula, the fleshy substance of the uvula, supposed to be a single symmetrical muscle, but really composed of paired halves

azygospore (a-z'i-gō-spōr), n [Gr a- priv

(a-18) + zygospore] A spore exactly resembling a zygospore, but produced parthenogenetically by an isolated reproductive organ in some members of the order Zygomycetes of the lower fungi applied to several parts, as muscles, veins, bones, etc., that are apparently single, or have no symmetrical fellow. — Azygous artery, an artery of the knee-joint, usually coming from the popliteal, but sometimes from one of the superior articular

large azygous vein arises in small branches from the upper lumbar vertebrae, passes up into the thorax to the right of the aorta, and receiving the eight inferior right intercostal veins, the lesser azygous veins, the left superior intercostal vein, the right bronchial vein, and some esophageal and mediastinal branches, empties into the

lower or small azygous vein begins in the upper lumbar veins, enters the thorax, receives the four or five lower left intercostal veins and some esophageal and mediastinal branches, and empties usually into the right azygous

veins, which lie between those that empty into the left superior intercostal trunk and those that empty into the left lower azygos. They are usually two or three in number.

vein and below with the right azygous vein

azym, azyme (az'im), n. [LL. azymus, also azymon, unleavened bread, < Gr ἀζυμος, neut

ἀζυμος, unleavened, < a- priv + ζυμω, leaven,

< ζειν, boil, bubble, ferment.] Unleavened bread, or a loaf of unleavened bread; especially, the bread eaten among the Jews at the time of the Passover, or that used in part of the Christian church for consecration in the eucharist: generally in the plural. In the West ern Church azymes seem to have been used as far back as positive testimony goes, but the evidence either for or against their use in the earlier centuries is very scanty.

In the Eastern Church consecration of leavened bread seems to have been the universal rule since the earliest times, but some early Oriental sects used azymes. The Latin Church does not hold that the use of leavened bread invalidates consecration. The controversy between the Eastern and Western churches as to azymes turns mainly on the question whether the Last Supper was within the period of unleavened bread, and whether therefore the holy communion was instituted with azymes or not.

We have shunned the obscurity of the papists in their azymes, tunic, etc

early Greek and Latin forms of b, and with the ancient Egyptian characters, hieratic and hieroglyphic, from which the others are by many authorities supposed to be ultimately derived, are given below.

The value of the character is the same in all these alphabets. It is a labial sonant (or voiced) mute (or stop, or cheek), that is, it is made with the lips alone, by a complete closure cutting off all exit of breath from the mouth, but with accompanying sonant vibrations of the vocal chords, the current of air necessary to produce this being driven from the lungs into the closed cavity of the mouth. The corresponding surd (or voiceless) mute is p. (See P) B has nothing of that variety of pronunciation shown by most English letters, but it is sometimes silent, as when final after m, in lamb, lumb, tomb, thumb, and in a few other cases, as debt, doubt. In most of these cases b is a modern graphic insertion, and was never pronounced (in the English forms), e g, lumb, thumb, debt, doubt. In the fundamental or Germanic part of our language a b comes from a more original aspirate found in Sanskrit as bh, in Greek as ph (ph), in Latin usually as f. Examples are E. brother = Skt. bhrāta = Gr. φάτωρ = L. frater. E. dear (v) = Skt. yāhar = Gr. φάτωρ = L. ferri. With the English b corresponds that of most of the other Germanic dialects. In the original Indo-European or Aryan language b was nearly or altogether wanting.

2 As a numeral, B was used by the Hebrews and Greeks, as now by the Arabians, for 2.—
3 As a symbol: (a) In music, the seventh tone, or "leading tone," of the model diatonic scale, or scale of C. B was the last tone to be adopted into the modern major scale. It was the first note to be modified by lowering its pitch a semitone, its two forms, the b rotundum or B flat (b) and the b quadratum or B natural (B) (see below), afterward became conventional signs which were applied as accidentals to all the notes of the scale. See accidental, n. 1. In Italian and French the same note is called si. In German use B denotes B flat, while B natural is represented by H, and is called ha. (b) In chem., the symbol of boron. (c) In ornith., the accessory femorocaudal muscle, one of the chief classifying muscles of the leg. A. H. Garrod. (d) In math., see A, 2 (c). (e) In abstract reasoning, suppositions, etc., the second or other person or thing mentioned: as, if A strike B. (f) In general, the second in any series: as, Company B (of a regiment), schedule B, etc., in the form b, or b, the second column of a page, in a book printed in columns—4 As an abbreviation, B stands for—(a) Bachelor (or Middle Latin Baccalarius), in B A or A B, B C E, B D, B L, B M, etc. See these abbreviations. (b) In dates, before, as in B C or B C, and born, as in b 1813. (c) In a ship's log-book, in the form b, blue sky. (d) In hydrometric measurements, Baumé as, 8° B. See Baumé's hydrometer, under hydrometer. Also Be—B, or B flat, an English humorous euphemism for bug (Cinzellectarius)—Baccalarius, in music, the sharp so called because it was originally indicated by crossing or canceling the symbol of B quadratum—B quadratum, in music, literally square B, a modified form (a) of the black-letter b used before the invention of accidentals to denote B natural in distinction from B flat now used as the natural. See accidental, n. 1—B rotundum, in music, literally round B, a modified form (b) of the Roman letter b first used to denote B flat, as distinguished from B quadratum. It is now the conventional sign of the flat. See accidental, n. 1—Not to know B from a bull's foot, or a broomstick, or a battledore, to be very illiterate or very ignorant: popular alliterative comparisons, the first dating from the Middle English period. ba-l, v. t. baag-nook, n. A weapon for secret attack used among the Malharras in India, consisting of short, sharp, curving steel blades, secured to a strap or plate passing across the palm of the hand, and so arranged as not to wound the user. An apparently friendly movement of the hand inflicts a terrible wound.

Baal (bā'al), n. [L. Baal, Gr. Βαάλ, Heb. Ba'al, orig. 'lord,' or 'owner,' applied to any deity, then to a particular deity; pl. ba'alim.] The name of a Semitic solar deity worshipped, especially by the Phoenicians and their descendants the Carthaginians, with much license and sensuality. Baal was derived from the Babylonian Bel, a deity of a much higher type, and was merged in the Tyrian Melkarth. In its original generic sense of 'lord,' the name was applied to many different divinities, or, with qualifying epithets, to the same divinity regarded in different aspects and as exercising different functions. Thus in Hos. ii 16 it is applied to Jehovah himself, while Baal berith (the covenant lord) was the god of the Shechemites, and Baal zebub (the fly god) the idol of the Philistines at Ekron. Baal peor (lord of the opening) was a god of Moab and Midian, probably the same as Chemosh. The word enters into the composition of many Hebrew, Phoenician, and Carthaginian names of persons and places, as Jerubaal, Hantrubal (help of Baal), Hannibal (grace of Baal), Baal Hammon, Baal Thamar, etc.
Baalism (bā'al-izm), n. [Baal + -ism.] The worship of Baal, gross idolatry of any kind.
His seven thousand whose knees were not supplied with the Baalism of that age.
Fuller

Baalist (bā'al-ist), n. [Baal + -ist.] A worshiper of Baal; a Baalite.
Baalite (bā'al-it), n. [Baal + -ite.] A worshiper of Baal, hence, a worshiper of heathen gods in general, an idolater, or idolatrous worshiper.

The OF. forms appear to be the oldest. The origin of the name is unknown. The Ar mainmān is prob from the European word] A quadrumanous animal of the old world, of the subfamily Cynopithecinae, and especially of either of the genera Cynocephalus (or Papio) and Mandrillus (or Mormon). The baboon has a large prominent muzzle and a low facial angle, constituting a physiognomy to which the term "dog-faced" has been applied. It has cheek pouches, large canine teeth, tall usually short (whence the term "pig-tailed" applied to some), and large bare ischial callosities, often gayly colored. Its fore and hind limbs are proportionate, so that the animal can go upon all fours like ordinary quadrupeds, or sit upright like most other monkeys. Baboons are generally large, heavy animals, some equalling a mastiff in size and weight, and are among the most sullen, intractable, ferocious, and filthy brutes of the order to which they belong. Most of them are African, and they are usually gregarious, going in large troops, and feeding on fruits, roots, birds, eggs, insects, etc. Among those which have special names are the anubis, chacma, mandrill, drill, etc. Some of the Quadrumanus which belong technically to the same group as the baboons do not usually take the name, as the black ape of Celebes, Cynopithecus niger, and the Barbary ape, Inuus caudatus, while some monkeys of other groups are occasionally called baboons Babouvism (ba-bō'vizm), n [f F. babouvisme, < Babeuf (Babœuf) + -isme] The communistic system promulgated by the French socialist François Noël Babeuf during the revolution. Its fundamental principles were summed up in the sentence "The aim of society is the happiness of all, and happiness consists in equality." By "equality" was meant absolute uniformity in dress, food, elementary education, etc. The property of corporations was to be seized at once, and that of individuals at their death. Officers chosen by the people were to have unlimited powers to divide the product of the industry of all, according to the needs and requirements of each. A great conspiracy was organized by Babeuf and his followers for the establishment of a new government based on these principles, but it was betrayed to the Directory in May, 1796, and Babeuf was executed in May, 1797. 3†. [From a former common identification by Protestants of the "scarlet woman," "Babylon the great, the mother of harlots and abominations" (Rev. xvii. 5), with the Papacy.] (a) Popish. (b) Scarlet.—Babylonian art, a subdivision of Mesopotamian art, the later development of Chaldean art as practised at Babylon, both prior to the Assyrian domination, which began in the eleventh century B. C. and culminated in the ninth century, and after the restoration of the Babylonian kingdom, under Nabopolassar, about 600 B. C.

The architecture of Babylon, like that of Assyria, of which it was the model, employed as its chief material of construction the sun-dried brick, and held in general to the thick walls and massive forms which were imposed by this friable material. Stone was much more scarce in Babylonia than in Assyria, hence Babylonian decoration adhered in the main to painting on a surface of plaster for interiors, and to brilliantly enameled tiles, often forming pictorial subjects of great size and variety, for exteriors. In Babylonia, contrary to Assyrian practice, the temple, rising pyramidally in stages, each ascended by broad flights of steps, and each of a distinct color, was the most important development of architecture, the royal palace being subordinated to it. The scarcity of stone rendered sculpture scanty, but the gem-cut-ter's art produced cylinders or seals in great plenty and of much merit, and pottery, metal-work, and textile fabrics attained great perfection. See Mesopotamian art, and compare Chaldean art and Assyrian art, under the adjectives. — Babylonian quartz. Same as Babel quartz (see see, under quartz). — Babylonian scale, the sexagesimal scale of numeration, which originated in Babylonia.

baccara, baccarat (bak-a-rā'), n. [F., origin unknown] A French game of cards played by any number of betters and a banker, and with one or more packs of cards, according to the number of players. Each better deposits a stake, and all stakes are duplicated by the banker, after which the latter deals two cards to each player, including him self. The aim is to decide each individual bet by comparison of the total count held by each better with that held by the banker. The court-cards each count 10, and the others according to the spots. The counts range in value by series of 9, 10, 20, 8, 12, 25, 9, beating any other count. A player may call for more cards, but at the risk of exceeding 20 in count, which excess forfeits his bet. If a player's cards count 9 he declares it, when all who hold hands superior to that of the banker may

back-game (bak'gām), n. [< back¹, a., + game] 1. A game at backgammon or chess.—2. A return-game.

backgammon (bak-gam'on), n. [Also formerly baggammon, < back¹, a., + gammon¹, game (see gammon¹ and game¹), appar. so called because in certain circumstances the pieces are obliged to go back and reenter. The reason of the name is not certain, but the formation is clear Cf. back-game] 1. A game played by two persons upon a table or board made for the purpose, with pieces or men, dice-boxes, and dice. The board is in two parts, usually hinged to each other, on which twenty-four spaces, called points, are marked. Each player has fifteen men with which movements are made in accordance with the numbers turned up by the dice, the object of each player being to advance his men to the last six points, and then "throw them off," or remove them entirely from the board.

2. A single bout at backgammon won by a player before his opponent has advanced all of his men from the first six points.

backgammon (bak-gam'on), v. t. To beat by winning a backgammon. See backgammon, n., 2.

background (bak'graund), n. 1. The ground at the back or behind, as opposed to the front, situation in the rear of those objects, considerations, etc., which engage the attention; subordination or secondary position in contradistinction to principal or important position; place out of sight. used both literally (of physical objects) and figuratively, as, there were mountains in the background, the true reasons for this action were kept in the background.

A husband somewhere in the background Thackeray
 Forbearance and mercy to enemies are not unknown to the Old Testament, but they are in the background G. P. Fisher, B. of Christian, p. 22

Specifically.—2. The part of a picture represented as furthest from the spectator's eye, opposed to foreground. In pictures of which the foreground possesses the chief interest, the background is so designed as to enhance the effect of objects in the foreground, to which it is kept subordinate in color, etc., often serving no other purpose than that of a mere screen or setting behind the objects in which the interest is concentrated, as, a portrait with a landscape background; a group of figures with buildings in the background. In landscapes, when no such evident opposition is intended, or when the chief interest lies in the background, the term distance is properly used to denote the more distant planes in the picture, as distinguished from the foreground and the middle distance.

Here we see the rude and simple expedient by which, to atone for the want of aerial perspective, the vase painters indicated the background of their compositions. Figures more distant from the eye are always represented seated or standing on a higher level than figures in the foreground. C. T. Newton, Art and Archaeol., p. 389

The leafless trees become spirals of flame in the sunset, with the blue east for their background. Kimerson, Misc., p. 23

backhand (bak'hānd), n. and a. 1. n. 1. Writing which slopes backward or to the left as, he writes backhand—2. In tennis, the position behind the principal player.

No, faith, that's odds at tennis, my lord, not but if your ladyship please, I'll endeavor to keep your back hand a little, tho' upon my soul you may safely set me up at the line. Cibber, Careless Husband, iv

backhanded (bak'hānd'ed), a. 1. With the back of the hand as, a backhanded blow.—2. Done or effected with the hand turned backward, crosswise, or in any oblique direction; marked by a backward slope, direction, or effect as, backhanded writing, a backhanded stroke in sword-play or lawn-tennis. In the latter game a backhanded stroke is one that causes the ball to rotate so as to have a tendency on striking the ground to bound backward in the direction of the striker.

Hence—3. Figuratively, oblique in meaning; indirect; equivocal, ambiguous; sarcastic. as, a backhanded compliment.—4. Twisted in the opposite way from the usual method: said of a rope.

backworm (bak'wērm), n. A small worm generally found in the thin skin about the reins of hawks. See flunder.

back-wounding (bak'wōn'ding), a. Wounding at the back or behind one's back, backbiting; injuring surreptitiously as, "a backwounding calumny," Shak., M. for M., iii 2.

bacon (bā'kon or -kn), n. [Early mod. E. also *bakon, baken, < ME. bacon, baccoun, bakoun, < OF. bacon = Pr. bacoun, < ML. baco(n)-, bacon, side of bacon, shoulder, ham, also a swine, < OHG. bahho, bacho, MHG. bache, side of bacon, ham, (i) bache, a wild sow (obs. or dial. a ham), = ML. baka, bacon, ham, a swine, < OHG. *bah, etc., = AS. hwer, E. back¹. See back¹.] 1. Hog's flesh, especially the back and sides, salted or pickled and dried, usually in smoke.—2† Pork.—3† A hog, hence, a grossly fat person.—4† A rustic; a clown in allusion to the fact that swine's flesh was the meat chiefly eaten by the rural population. *N. E. D.

(On, barons, on!) Shak., 1 Hen IV., ii 2

To save one's bacon, to preserve one's self from harm. But here I say the Turks were much mistaken, Who, hating hogs, yet wished to save their bacon.
Byron, Don Juan, vii 42

bacon-beetle (bā'kon-bē'tl), n. A species of the genus Dermestes, D. lardarius, family Dermestidae, order Coleoptera, whose larvae are very destructive to stuffed animals in museums. The larvae are hairy, and whitish-brown in color.

Baconian (bā-kō'ni-an), a and n. [< Francis Bacon, born 1561, died 1626.] 1 A Pertaining to Francis Bacon, Baron Verulam, commonly called Lord Bacon as, the Baconian philosophy.—Baconian method, a term often, though incorrectly, applied to the method of

a, larva, b, one of its barbed hairs;
c, beetle. (Hair lines show natural sizes.)

induction (which see) as developed by modern science, on the supposition that Bacon was mainly instrumental in bringing this method into general use.

II. n. 1. An adherent of the Baconian philosophy.—2 One who holds the theory that Bacon wrote the plays usually attributed to Shakspeare.

Baconism (bā'kon-i-zm), n. [< Bacon + -ism.] The philosophy of Francis Bacon, or the general spirit of his writings.

These societies are schools of Baconism, designed to embody all that was of value in the thought and spirit of Bacon—namely, a protest against traditional authority in science, with of course a recommendation of induction and of the inductive sciences for their value in the arts of life.

bacteria (bak-tē'ri-ā), n. [NL see bacterium.]

1 Plural of bacterium, 1–2. [cap] A genus of gressorial orthopterous insects, of the family Phasmida, the stick-insects or walking-sticks. B. sarmentosa is about 10 inches long. See Phasmida.

Bacteriaceae (bak-tē'ri-ā-sē-ē), n. pl. [NL, < Bacterium + -aceae] A group of the simplest microscopic fungi, more usually called Schizomycetes, the achlorophyllous division of the Schizoporeae of Cohn, or of the Schizophyta of more recent authorities. They exhibit a great variety of form, and are subdivided accordingly into—(1) Sphaerobacteria which are spherical, as in Micrococcus; (2) Mycobacteria which are elliptical or shortly cylindrical as in Bacterium, the only genus; (3) Dennobacteria, which consist of straight filaments, as in Bacillus; (4) Spirobacteria, in which the filaments are more or less coiled, as in Spirillum.

bacterial (bak-tē'ri-āl), a. [< bacterium + -al] Pertaining to or resembling bacteria; of the nature of or caused by bacteria: as, a bacterial parasite in the blood, bacterial organisms, bacterial infusions.

The issue of a bacterial infection is either the death of the patient, or the death and elimination of the bacteria. Ziegler, Pathol. Anat. (trans.), 1: 247.

bacterian (bak-tē'ri-ān), a. Same as bacterial.

bactericidal (bak-tē'ri-sī-dāl), a. [< bactericide + -al] Destructive to bacteria.

A bactericide of great activity.

bacteriform (bak-tē'ri-fōrm), a. [< NL bacterium + L. forma, form] Of the form of bacteria, resembling bacteria.

bacterioid (bak-tē'ri-oid), a. [< bacterium + -oid] Resembling or closely allied to bacteria.

bacteriologist (bak-tē'ri-ō-jī-sht), n. [< bacteriology + -ist] One skilled in bacteriology.

bacteriology (bak-tē'ri-ō-jī-jī), n. [< NL bacterium + Gr. -λογία, < λέγειν, speak + -ology.] That department of biology which investigates bacteria and other microbes, especially their life-history and agency in disease; the scientific study of bacteria.

bacterioscopy (bak-tē'ri-ōs'kō-pi), n. [< NL bacterium + Gr. -σκοπία, < σκοπεῖν, view] Microscopic investigation of bacteria.

bacteriotherapeutic (bak-tē'ri-ō-ther-a-pū'tik), a. [< bacterium + therapeutic] Pertaining to bacteriotherapy.

Dr. Ballard has carefully followed the bacteriotherapeutic details advised by Cantani in eight cases of advanced phthisis with moderate fever. Medical News, XLIX, 41.

bacteriotherapy (bak-tē'ri-ō-ther-a-pi), n. [< NL bacterium + Gr. θεραπεία, medical treatment.] In mod., the introduction of bacteria into the system for the cure of disease. Thus in phthisis inhalations containing Bacterium termo have been employed, with the idea that the bacterium de-

bacteritic (bak-tē'rit'ik), a. [< bacterium + -itic see -itic.] Characterized or caused by the presence of bacteria.

bacterium (bak-tē'ri-urn), n.; pl. bacteria (-ē).

[NL, < Gr. βακτήριον, a little stick, dim. of βακτηρία, a staff, stick, < βακτρον, a staff, stick, akin to L. baculum, a staff see baculus.] 1. One of the micro-organisms which are concerned in the putrefactive processes, and are known as Schizomycetes, or fission fungi, in distinction from Saccharomycetes, or budding fungi, which produce alcoholic fermentation. Their true character was long in doubt, but they are now generally regarded as the lowest forms of vegetable life, and are known to multiply, in some species at least, by the formation of spores and even of true sporangia. They consist of exceedingly minute, spherical, oblong, or cylindrical cells, with out chlorophyll, multiply by transverse division, and may be found anywhere. Their origin and the part they take in putrefaction, fermentation, and disease have been the subject in recent years of much study and discussion. Very much remains in doubt, but there is no question of the importance of these investigations from a sanitary point of view. It also appears to have been demonstrated that the bacteria which exist in the soil are active in changing otherwise inert substances into matter suitable for the food of plants, converting the nitrogenous matter of organic origin into soluble nitrates. The genera and species have been variously defined, and are necessarily based on slight characters. The groups and principal genera usually recognized are Micrococcus, with spherical cells, concerned in certain fermentations and found in connection with special contagious diseases, the rod bacteria, Bacterium, the straight filiform bacteria, Bacillus, etc., and the spiral filiform bacteria, Vibrio, Spirillum, etc. Of the genus Micrococcus, M. diphthericus is considered to be the special cause of diphtheria, and M. vaccae of smallpox. See Bacteriaceae, and cut under bacillus.

2 [cap] A genus of microscopic fungi, consisting of a single short cylindrical or elliptical cell, or of two such cells united end to end, and capable of spontaneous movement. The best known species, B. termo, is the prime cause of putrefaction, occurring early in all infusions of animal and vegetable substances and multiplying with great rapidity. The individuals of this species are about one ten thousandth of an inch in length.

Bactrian (bak'tri-ān), a. and n. [< L. Bactrianus (Gr. Βακτριανός), < Bactria, < Gr. Βακτρία (also Βάκτρα, < Pers. Bākhtā), a province so called.] 1. a. Of or pertaining to Bactria or Bactriana, an ancient country of central Asia, with its capital, Bactra, on the site of the modern Balkh. It became a province of the Persian empire under Cyrus, and from about 255 to about 128 B. C. was a separate kingdom under a Greek dynasty—Bactrian camel. See camel.

II. n. A native or an inhabitant of Bactria.

Bactris (bak'tris), n. [NL, < Gr. βακτρον, a staff see bacterium] A genus of slender palms, consisting of about 40 species, found about rivers and in marshy places in America within the tropics. The stems are generally covered with spines, and the leaves are pinnate, though occasionally simple or 2 lobed. The fruit is small, with a thin fibrous pulp inclosing a hard black nut. The kernel of B. major is eaten in Cartagena. The stems of B. minor are used for walking sticks, under the name of Tobago canes.

baculi, n. Plural of baculus.

baculitic (bak'ū-lit), n. and a. [< NL Baculites, q. v.] 1. n. A fossil cephalopod of the genus Baculites, staff-stone.

II. a. Pertaining to or containing baculites.

Also baculitic.—Baculite limestone, a name given to the Chalk of Normandy, from the abundance of baculites which it contains.

Baculites (bak'ū-lit'ēs), n. [NL, < L. baculum, a staff, + -ites: see -ite.] A genus of polythalamous or many-chambered cephalopods, belonging to the family Ammonitidae. The species are known only in a fossil state, having become extinct at the close of the Cretaceous period. The shell is straight, more or less compressed, conical, and very much elongated. The chambers are sinuous and pierced by a marginal siphon. The external chamber is considerably larger than the rest. There are about 20 species, found from the Neocomian to the Chalk formation.

Portion of Baculites, fossilized.

baculometry (bak'ū-lom'e-tri), n. [< L. baculum, a staff, + Gr. -μετρία, < μέτρον, a measure.] The measurement of heights or distances by means of staves. Phillips.

baculus (bak'ū-lus), n.; pl. baculi (-li). [L., more commonly neut. baculum, a stick, staff, scepter, etc.; cf. L.L. dim. bacillus (see bacillus); akin to Gr. βακτηρον, a rod, staff see bacterium.] 1. A divining-rod.—2. A long staff or crutch upon which worshippers were formerly allowed to lean during long offices, such as the psalms.—3. [cap] [NL] A genus of crustaceans.

bad¹ (bad), a. and n. [*< ME. bad, badde, bad, worthless, wicked, prob. a generalized adj. use (with loss of -l, as in ME. muche for muchel, < AS. mycel, much, ME. lyte for lytel, < AS. lytel, little, ME. wenche for wenchel, < AS. wencel see much, muckle, lite, lyte, little, and wench) of a noun, *baddol, < AS. bæddel (twice, in glosses), with equiv. deriv. bædling (suffix -ings), an effeminate person, a hermaphrodite, with formative -el, < *bad = OHG *bad, pad, a hermaphrodite (Leo). This word appears to exist also in some AS. local names, but traces elsewhere are slight, of AS *bede, "pede, immature," negative "or-bede, "or-pede, adultus," in glosses. This etymology, first suggested by Leo, is uncertain, but it is the only one that fairly satisfies the phonetic and historical conditions, the word can have no connection, as suggested, with Goth. bauths, deaf and dumb, with G. bose, bad, or with Corn bad, Ir. Gael. baoth, foolish, etc. The orig. word, AS bæddel, ME baddel*, on account of its sinister import, is scarcely found in literature, but, like other words of similar sense, it prob. flourished in vulgar speech as an indefinite term of abuse, and at length, divested of its original meaning, emerged in literary use as a mere adj., badde, equiv. to the older evil. (Cf. the similar development of the adj. wicked, ME. wicked, wikked, earlier wicke, wikke, from the noun AS wicca, m., a witch, wizard, hence an evil person see wicked.) The adj. first appears at the end of the 13th century, and does not become common till the 15th century. In high literary use it is comparatively rare, as against evil, till the 18th century. In the English Bible bad occurs but rarely, and only in the familiar antithesis with good. Bad was formerly compared reg. badder, baddest, but has now taken from evil the irreg. comparison worse, worst.] 1. a. compar. worse, superl. worst (formerly badder, baddest). 1. Evil; ill; vicious; wicked; depraved. applied to persons, conduct, character, influence, etc.: as, a bad man; bad conduct; a bad life; a bad heart, bad influence, etc.*

1 A token or cognizance worn in allusion to

or achievements. The badge in the middle ages was not necessarily heraldic, though in many cases it was selected from one or more of the heraldic bearings, and it is not bound by heraldic rules. Thus, the white hart of

described in the language of blazon. A figure for a badge might also be chosen arbitrarily, as the bear of Richard

III. Badges selected as personal tokens have often become heraldic bearings, as the three feathers of the Prince of Wales

His gorgeous collar hung adown,

Scott, Marmion, v 8.

OD blair, bald, blare, blacre, D. blaar, a white spot on the forehead, cf also the equiv name bauson] 1 A fossorial plantigrade carnivorous mammal, of the family Mustelidae and subfamily Melinae (For its technical characters see Melinae) The common European species, to which the name was first applied, is Meles vulgaris or Meles taxus, it is about 2 feet long, of heavy and clumsy shape, low on the legs with a short thick tail, a long snout, and long claws fitted for digging. The general color is grizzled gray with dark limbs, and black and white stripes on the head. This animal inhabits temperate and northern portions of Europe and Asia. Its flesh is used as food; its pelt in furriery, and its hair for making shaving brushes and the kind of artists brushes called badgers. In a state of nature the animal is less ferocious than some of the other species. The American badger, Taxidea americana, resembles the foregoing, but differs in the dental formula and some other technical characters. It is a common animal in the western States and Territories, and in some regions, as the Missouri watershed it is very abundant. The Indian badger is Arctonyx colvini. It is also called sand bear and badger pig. The bayou skunk (so called from its extreme felineity), the toledu or toledu, Mydaus nebulosus is a true badger, seen cut under toledu. The ratel, honey badger, or Cape badger Mellivora capensis, is usually referred, though belonging to a different subfamily, the Mellivora. The word badger is often called badger in Australia. It is a wide spread vulgar error that the legs of the badger are shorter on one side than the other, hence "the uneven legged badger", Drayton

We are not badgers, For our legs are one as long as the other air is pressed from the bag by the performer's elbow. It originated in the East, was known to the Greeks and Romans, was popular in Europe throughout the middle ages, and is still used in many eastern countries as well as among the country people of Poland, Italy, the south of France, and in Scotland and Ireland. Though now often regarded as the national instrument of Scotland, especially (Little Scotland), its origin and use seem to belong to the Celtic race in general. In its best known form it has four pipes. One of these, called the chanter, has a double reed and eight finger holes, so that melodious may be played upon it. Its compass may be approximately indicated thus:

There are three other pipes, called drones, with a single reed, which give a continuous sound, and are tuned in various ways. There are several kinds of bagpipes, as the Scotch (Highland and Lowland), which is the most important most characteristic, best known, and perhaps the oldest the English, or perhaps more properly Northumbrian, a fiddle instrument, no longer in use, and the Irish, which is the most elaborate and most in accordance with modern ideas of musical accuracy. The word is now used chiefly in the plural, especially in Scotland.

Balanism (bā'yan-izm), n [From Michel Banius, or de Bay, its author] A system of religious opinions, regarded as an anticipation of Jansenism, found in part or constructively in the writings of Banius (Michel de Bay, 1513-1589) of the University of Louvain. As condemned by Pius V and Gregory XIII, its chief points are that original righteousness was an integral part of human nature before the fall, not an additional gift of God, that Adam could have merited eternal life as a matter of strict justice, that man as fallen was mutilated in nature and capable of sin only, and that all works are sinful unless done from pure love of God. Balanus submitted to the condemnation of his doctrines.

2 The keeping of a person in nominal custody on security that he shall appear in court at a specified time. The person is said to be admitted to bail, in which phrase, however, bail is now commonly thought of as the security given. See 3.

3 Security given to obtain the release of a prisoner from custody, pending final decision in the action against him. In civil cases a person arrested has always the right to give sufficient bail, and thereupon be released from custody. In criminal cases the defendant has also this right, as a rule, when the crime charged is a mere misdemeanor. Whether to bail one charged with treason or felony is usually in the discretion of the judge, and in some states bail is always denied to one held for a crime punishable with death. The security is in the form of a bond executed by responsible sureties, providing that the defendant shall appear at the order of the court under penalty of forfeiture of the sum named in the bond. The person held is regarded as but transferred from the custody of the law to that of his sureties, who may therefore sue, and surrender him at any time. In civil cases there are several kinds of bail at common law, the chief being common bail and special bail. Common bail, or bad bene, which is now disused, was given to the sheriff on a bail bond entered into by two persons, on condition that the defendant appear at the day and in such place as the arresting process commands. Special bail, bail above, or bail to the action, is given by persons who undertake generally after appearance of a defendant, that if he be condemned in the action he shall satisfy the debt, costs, and damages or render himself to the proper person or that they will do so for him. (Wharton) In Scotland, bail in civil cases is called caution (see see).

When it is bak'd with frost. Shak, Tempest, I, 2

II. intrans 1. To do the work of baking.

I keep his house, and I wash, wring, brew, bake,

and do all myself. Shak, M. of W., I, 4

2 To undergo the process of baking.

bake (bak), n [bake*, < (f. *butch*¹).] A baking.

After this Esau finished the oven, and accomplished a bake of bread therein. Thoreau, in Norway, p. 128.

bakeboard (bāk'bōrd), n A board on which

bread.

baked-apple (bāk'tap'l), n A name given in Labrador to the dried fruit of the Rubus chama-

baked-meat, bake-meat (bāk'tē, bāk'mēt), n

[Prop. baked meat, < baked + meat.] 1. Food

food.

In the uppermost basket there was of all manner of baked meats for Pharaoh. Gen xl, 17

Thrift! thrift! Horatio! the funeral baked meats

Shak, Hamlet, I, 2

2 A meat-pie.

You speak as if a man

Should know what fowl is coffin'd in a baked meat.

Afore you cut it up. White Devil, IV, 1

bakehouse (bāk'hous), n [E. dial. also back-

house, < ME. bak-house, bachouse (= Ld. back-

A building or an apartment used for the pre-

bake-meat, n. See baked-meat.

baken (bā'kn), n. An obsolete past participle of bake.

baker (bā'kēr), n [ME. bakari*, bakere, < AS.

bacen (= OS. bakkari = D. bakker = G. bäcker, becker = Icel. bakari = Sw. bakare = Dan. bä- ger), < bacan, bako, see bake and -er.] Hence baketer, bakster, baxter.] 1 One who bakes, specifically, one whose business it is to make

used in baking. [U. S.] — 3 The popular name of the fish-fly, Sarcophaga carnaria. — Bakers'

dosen, thirteen reckoned as a dozen. It was customary for bakers, like some other tradesmen, to give 13 for 12, the extra piece being called among bakers the in bread or to bread. Hence was the custom originated when heavy penalties were inflicted for short weights, bakers giving the extra bread to secure themselves. — Bakers' itch, a species of psoriasis, so called when it is confined to the back of the hand. It often appears in bakers. — Bakers' salt, subcarbonate of ammonia, or salting salts, so called from its being used by bakers as a substitute for yeast in

baker-foot (bā'kēr-fut), n, pl. baker-feet (-fēt)

lor (?), Art of Handsomeness (1602), p. 79.

baker-kneed (bā'kēr-nēd), a. Same as baker- legged.

baker-legged (bā'kēr-legd), a. Disfigured by

at the knees.

bakery (bā'kēr-ī), n, pl. bakeries (-iz). [bake*

+ -ry.] 1 The trade of a baker. [Rare.] —

2 A place used for making bread, etc., or for the sale of baker's goods, a bakehouse or baker's establishment; a baker's shop.

bakester, n. [Also bakster, baxter (whence the proper name Baxter).] < ME. bakester, bakster, baxter, usually masc., < AS. baceoster (fem. in form, but masc. in use), a baker, < bacan, bake,

+ -ster, E. -ster.] A baker, properly, a female baker as, "brewsters and bakesters," Piers

Plowman. In Scotland commonly written bac-

bakestone (bāk'stōn), n [E. dial. also back-

stone.] A flat stone or slate on which cakes are baked. [Prov. Eng.]

bakey (bā

bakhshish, n. See bukhshish.

baking (bā'king), n. [Verbal n of bake.] 1. The act of baking — 2 The quantity baked at once, as, a baking of bread. Also called bake and bath.

baking-powder (bā'king-pou'der), n. Any powder used as a substitute for yeast in raising bread, cakes, etc. Baking powders are composed of bicarbonate of sodium or potassium mixed with a dry powder capable of setting carbonic acid free when the mixture is moistened.

bakhshish, bakhshish (bak'shish), n. [Also bakhshish, bakshish, bukshish, etc.; < Turk Ar Hind bakhshish, < Pers bakhshish, a present, < bakhshudan, give.] In the East, a present or gratuity in money.

We promised him bakhshish for a sight of the sacred book. B. Taylor, Lands of the Saracen, p. 94.

Bakhshish, says a modern writer, "is a fee or present which the Arabs (he here means the Egyptians, who got the word from the Persians through the Turks) claim on all occasions for services you render them, as well as for services they have rendered you." This bakhshish, in fact, is a sort of bribe or tribute, which the poor Arab believes himself entitled to claim from every respectable looking person. R. P. Burton, 11 Medinah, p. 28.

bakufu (bak'u-fu), n. [Jap baku, curtain, + fu, office.] Certain government, that is, the government or council of the former shoguns of Japan, so called in allusion to the curtain used in time of war to screen off that part of the camp occupied by the general or shogun. See shogun.

On the 3rd of June the Shōgun had an audience of the Mikado. His majesty's speech on the occasion was as follows: "The duties of the bakufu are on the one hand to govern the empire in peace, and on the other to subjugate the barbarians." F. O. Adams, Japan, 1894.

bal An abbreviation of balance.

balaaam (bā'lām), n. [In allusion to Balaam and his "dumb ass speaking with man's voice" (Num xxii 28-30, 2 Pet ii 16).] 1 Matter regarding marvelous and incredible events inserted in a newspaper to fill space. [English printers' cant.]

Balaam is the cant name for useless paragraphs about monstrous productions of nature and the like, kept standing in type to be used whenever the real news of the day leaves an awkward space that must be filled up somehow. Lockhart, Life of Scott, lxx.

Being in Balaam, and place him on the table. J. Wilson, Noctes Ambros, II xvi.

balaam-box, balaam-basket (bā'lām-boks, -bus kot), n. An editor's depository for worthless matter, rejected writings, etc.

Who can doubt that an Essay for the Edinburgh Review in "the old unpolluted English language," would have been consigned by the editor, to his balaam basket? P. Hall, Mod Eng, p. 37.

Balaamite (bā'lām-it), n. [< Balaam (Num xxii) + -ite.] One who makes a profession of religion for the sake of gain, in allusion to the prophet Balaam.

Bala beds. See bed.

balachan (bal'a-chān), n. Same as balachong. balachong (bal'a-chong), n. [< Malay bālāchan.] A substance composed of small fishes or shrimps pounded up with salt and spices, and then dried. It is much used in the East as a condiment for rice. Also balachān, balachōng, balachān.

baladine, n. See balladine.

Balæna (ba-lō'nā), n. [L. < Gr βαλῆνα, more correctly βαλλῆνα, a whale.] The typical genus of whalebone whales, of the family Balaenidae, having the cervical vertebrae ankylosed, the fore limbs pentadactyl, the head enormous, with long black elastic baleen, the throat without furrows, and no dorsal fin. It contains the Greenland or arctic whale, B mysticetus, and several other species found in all seas. See cuts under ankylolepis and Balaenidae.

Balaeniceps (ba-lē-ni-seps), n. [NL. < L. balæna, a whale, + -ceps, < caput, head.] A genus of grallatorial altricial birds, of which the type and only known member is the shoebill or whalehead of Africa, B rer, comparatively lately discovered on the upper part of the White Nile. The genus is the type of a family Balaenicipidae, of somewhat uncertain position, probably near the storks. The bird is remarkable for its enormous vaulted beak, which is much longer than the head. Little is known of its habits and economy. It is a large species, standing upward of 8 feet high. The bill some what resembles that of the boat-billed heron, Cancroma cucullaria. See cut in preceding column.

Balaenicipidae (ba-lē-ni-sip'i-dē), n pl [NL. < Balaeniceps (-cep-) + -idae.] A family of birds, of which the genus Balaeniceps is the type and only known representative. It belongs to the altricial or hœdionant series of wading birds, and is probably nearly related to the Croconidae, or storks.

balaenid (bal'ē-nid), n. A cetacean of the family Balaenidae, any right whale.

Balaenidae (ba-lē-ni-dē), n pl [NL. < Balæna + -idae.] A family of right whales, or true whalebone whales, typified by the genera Balæna and Balaenoptera, having baleen instead of teeth. Teeth are, however, present in the fetus though they never cut the gum. The Balaenidae may be divided into two sections, the smooth whales, characterized by smoothness of skin and the absence of a dorsal fin, as the Greenland or right whale, Balæna mysticetus, and the fin-whales, in which the skin is furrowed and the dorsal fin is present as the flippers (Physalus), humpbaked whales (Megaptera), and rorquals or piked whales (Balaenoptera). The term is sometimes restricted to the first of these sections, the other whalebone whales then constituting a separate family, Balaenopteridae. See whale.

Balaeninae (bal'ē-ni-nē), n pl [NL. < Balæna + -inae.] A subfamily of Balaenidae, typified by the genus Balæna, containing only the smooth right whales. See Balæna.

Balaenoidæ (bal'ē-noi-dē), n pl [NL. < Balæna + -oidæ.] One of the three primary groups into which the Cetacea are divisible, the other two being the Delphinoidæ and the Phocodontia. It embraces the right whales (Balæna) and the fin-whales (Balaenoptera, etc.).

Balaenoptera (bal'ē-nop'te-ra), n. [NL. < L. balæna, a whale, + Gr. πτερόν, a wing.] A genus of whalebone whales, containing the several species of piked whales, rorquals, finners, finbacks, or razor-backs, so called from their long, sharp, falcate dorsal fin. They are found in all seas. Some are very large, as B sibbaldi, which attains a length of 80 feet. The flippers have 4 digits. The baleen is short and coarse. The skin of the throat is folded, the head is small, flat and pointed, the body is long and slender, and the cervical vertebrae are free. Common Atlantic species are B musculus and B borealis. The whale bone is of comparatively little value.

balaenopterid (bal'ē-nop'te-rid), n. A cetacean of the family Balaenopteridae.

Balaenopteridae (bal'ē-nop'te-ri-dē), n pl [NL. < Balaenoptera + -idae.] The furrowed whalebone whales; a family of mysticete cetaceans, typified by the genus Balaenoptera, having the throat plicated, the dorsal fin developed, the cervical vertebrae free or incompletely ankylosed, the flippers with only 4 digits, and the baleen short and coarse. It contains the humpbacked and the finner whales, sometimes respectively made types of the subfamilies Megapterinae and Balaenopterinae.

Balaenopterinae (bal'ē-nop'te-ri-nē), n pl [NL. < Balaenoptera + -inae.] A subfamily of whalebone whales, typified by the genus Balaenoptera. (a) A subfamily of Balaenidae, including the furrowed as distinguished from the smooth right whales or Balaeninae. (b) A subfamily of Balaenopteridae, including the finner whales as distinguished from the humpbacked whales or Megapterinae, having a high, erect, falcate dorsal fin, and 4 digits of not more than 6 phalanges.

balalaika (bal-a-lī'kā), n. [= F balalaika = G balalaika, ropr Russ. balalaika.] A musical instrument of very ancient Slavic origin, common among the Russians and Tatars, and, according to Niebuhr, also in Egypt and Arabia. It is of the guitar kind, and has two, three or four strings, giving a minor chord (Mendel). It is now most used by the gipsies of eastern Europe.

The dances of the gipsies, accompanied by the music of the balalaika, and clapping of hands.

See bi-2, *lanx*², *launce*², and auncel.]

1 An instrument for determining the weight of bodies as compared with an assumed unit-mass. In its simplest and most scientific form it consists of a horizontal lever, having its fulcrum (which is a knife edge) just above the center of gravity of the whole balance, and carrying two pans suspended as delicately as possible (preferably from knife edges) at equal distances on the right and left of the fulcrum. It also carries a tongue pointer or index (a slender rod) rigidly attached to the middle of the beam or lever, and extending vertically up or down. Except in coarse balances, there is a divided scale, over which the end of the tongue moves in the oscillations of the balance. All delicate balances are protected from currents of air by glass cases, and they have contrivances for steadying the pans and often for removing the knives from their bearings and for replacing them. Exceedingly delicate balances are sometimes inclosed in vacuum chambers, and have machinery for changing the weights. In using the balance, the substance to be weighed is placed in one pan or scale and the weights are put in the other, and different combinations of weights are tried until the pointer oscillates at equal distances to one side and the other of the position it has when the scales are empty. In chemical balances the last adjustment is obtained by moving a minute weight, or rider, to different points on the delicately graduated beam. The figure shows the beam of a balance of precision. It is so formed as to combine stiffness with lightness, and there are various adjustments for moving the center of gravity, the knife edges, etc. Other things being equal, the greater the length of Beam and neighboring parts of a Balance of Precision. A, beam; B, knife edge on which it turns; C, knife edge fixed to the beam on which the pans are hung; D, the beam pieces of the pans; E, tongue, the lower extremity of which moves over a scale; F, screw with a nut for raising and lowering the center of gravity; this has no connection with the horizontal rod; G, screw with a nut for carrying the center of gravity toward one or the other pan; H, a rider or little weight whose value depends on its position on the beam which it straddles; I, rod sliding horizontally with a hook to take up and set down the rider; K, A, pieces, which raise and lower the levers; L, I, I, levers to take the beam and pans simultaneously off their bearings when the weights are to be changed; M, M, knots supporting the beam when the levers L, L, are raised; N, N, N, N, screws supporting the pans when the levers L, L, are raised. Many balances have arrangements for adjusting the relative positions of the three knives but these are discarded in the larger balances.

the arms and the smaller the distance of the center of gravity below the center of suspension, the greater will be the sensibility of the balance or the angular amount of the division produced with a given slight addition to either scale. The degree of sensibility to be desired depends upon the use to which the instrument is to be put. Such a balance as is employed in accurate chemical analysis will indicate a difference of weight of a tenth or hundredth of a milligram.

What wrongs our arms may do, what wrongs we suffer Shak., 2 Hen IV, iv 1.

2 Any apparatus for weighing, as a steel-yard or a spring-balance — 3. One of the scales of a balance; in the plural, scales.

And I beheld and lo a black horse, and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. Rev vi. 5.

Take a pinte of air, and weigh it against a pinte of water, and you will see the balance of the last go down a main. Dugby, Nat Bodies, iii 19 (N E D).

4 The act of weighing mentally; the act of comparing or estimating two things as in a balance.

Upon a fair balance of the advantages on either side
By Atterbury

5. An equivalent or equalizing weight, that which is put into one scale to offset the weight in the other; the weight necessary to make up the difference between two unequal weights, a counterpoise, literally or figuratively. Specifically—6. In mining, a counterpoise or counterweight used in such a way as to assist the engine in lifting the load—7 The part of a clock or watch which regulates the beats formerly, a pin oscillating on its center, and thus resembling the beam of a balance, now, a wheel. See balance-wheel.—8 The arithmetical difference between the two sides of an account, as, to strike a balance—9 The sum or amount necessary to balance the two sides of an account, usually spoken of as a debit or a credit balance, as, I have still a balance at my banker's, a balance still due—10 A surplus, a remainder, the rest, the residue; what remains or is left over as, he bequeathed the balance of his estate to A. B., the balance of a meal [A colloquial use, of commercial origin].—11 A balanced condition; a state of equilibrium or equipoise as, to lose one's balance

His credit now in doubtful balance hangs
Spenser, F. Q., II, l. 3

12 Harmonious arrangement or adjustment, just proportion, especially in the arts of design—13 [cap.] In astron., a sign of the zodiac, called in Latin Libra, which the sun enters at the equinox in September—Aerostatic balance See aerostatic.—Automaton balance See automaton.—Balance of power, in international law, a distribution and an opposition of forces among nations forming part of one system, such that no state shall be in a position, either alone or united with others, to impose its will on any other state or interfere with its independence. (Ordan.) The leading rule by which it has been sought to effect this in Europe has been to oppose a very new arrangement which the states either materially to augment the strength of one of the greater powers or to diminish that of another

The meaning of the balance of power is this that any European state may be restrained from pursuing plans of acquisition, or making preparations looking towards future acquisitions, which are judged to be hazardous to the independence and national existence of its neighbors

Woolsey, Intro. to Inter Law, § 43

Balance of probabilities, the excess of reasons for believing one of two alternatives over the reasons for believing the other. It is measured by the logarithm of the ratio of the chances in favor of a proposition to the chances against it.—Balance of trade, the difference between the amount or value of the commodities exported from and imported into a country. The balance is said to be favorable for or in favor of a country when the value of its exports exceeds that of its imports, and unfavorable when the value of its imports exceeds that of its exports

Bent-lever balance See tangent balance.—Compensation balance See compensation.—Danish balance, a weighing apparatus somewhat resembling the steelyard, but differing from it in having the fulcrum movable, the weight being at one end and the load at the other, the loop by which it is suspended is shifted along the beam until equilibrium is established. The weight of the substance in the scale pan is indicated by the point at which the fulcrum is placed when the instrument is in equilibrium.—Electric balance See absolute electrometer, under electrometer, differential galvanometer, under galvanometer, induction balance.—What stone's bridge, under resistance.—Expansive balance, a compensation balance in watches, consisting of a compound rim whose outer and inner portions are made of metals having different rates of expansion by heat. This arrangement serves to counteract the effects of variations of temperature upon the speed of the watch.—False balance, a balance having arms of unequal length, or of equal length and unequal weight, so that its positions when empty and when carrying equal weights in the two pans are different.—Hydraulic balance See hydraulic.

Hydrostatic balance See hydrostatic.—Hygrometric balance See hygrometric.—Robert's balance, a balance having two horizontal beams one over the other, connected at their extremities by joints to vertical pieces, so that the whole forms a linked parallelogram. The scales are at the top. The advantage of the contrivance is, that it makes it a matter of indifference at what point on the pan the object to be weighed, or the counterpoise, is placed. An improved form of this balance is commonly used to weigh articles sold by druggists.—Roman balance, a steelyard (which see).—Spring-balance, a contrivance for determining the weight of any article by observing the amount of deflection or compression which it produces upon a helical steel spring properly adjusted and fitted with an index working against a graduated scale. Another form of spring balance is made in the shape of the letter C, the upper end being suspended by a ring, and the lower end affording attachment for the hook whereby the object is suspended. As the bow opens a finger traverses a graduated arc and registers the weight.—Thermic or actinic balance. Same as bolometer.—To cast the balance, to turn the scale, cause one scale to preponderate often used figuratively. South, Dryden.—To hold in balance, to keep in a state of uncertainty or suspense

Chaucer, Pro. to Canon's Yeoman's Tale, l. 58

To pay a balance, to pay the difference and make two accounts equal.—Torsion-balance, an instrument for measuring certain electrical forces and the intensity of magnets. It consists of a magnetic needle suspended by a silk thread or a very fine wire in a glass cylinder of which the circumference is graduated. The force of magnetism to be measured is applied to one side of the cylinder, either inside or outside, and its intensity is indicated by the amount of deflection of the suspended needle, which is caused to exert a force of torsion on the thread or wire which supports it. balance-bar (bal'ans-bär), n. Same as balance-beam.

balance-barometer (bal'ans-ba-rom'e-tér), n. A barometer consisting of a beam balanced on a pivot, and formed, on opposite sides of the pivot, of materials differing greatly in specific gravity. The bulks of the parts on either side of the fulcrum, and consequently the volumes of air displaced by them, thus differ greatly. If the air increases in density its effective buoyancy on the more bulky arm considerably exceeds its effect upon the smaller, the former therefore rises. If the air becomes lighter the reverse happens. The vibrations are noted upon a scale balance-beam (bal'ans-beam), n. 1 The beam of a balance—2 A long beam attached to a draw-bridge, the gate of a canal-lock, etc., serving partially to counterbalance its weight, and used in opening and closing it. Also called balance-bar balance-bob (bal'ans-hob), n. A beam, bent lever, or bob, rocking or oscillating on an axis, and having at one end a counterpoise, while the other is attached to the rod of a Cornish pumping-engine. It is designed to relieve the strain on the crank and rod resulting from lifting a heavy load. Also called oscillating or rocking bob. See bob balance-book (bal'ans-buk), n. In com., a book in which the adjusted debtor and creditor accounts have been posted from the ledger.

balance-bridge (bal'ans-brij), n. A bridge in which the overhang beyond an abutment is counterbalanced either by means of heavy weights connected with it by chains running over pulleys, or by a portion of the roadway which extends backward from the abutment. See basculin-bridge balance-chamber (bal'ans-chäm'bér), n. In a Whitehead torpedo, a compartment just behind the condensed-air chamber, containing the devices which keep the torpedo at its proper depth in the water balance-crane (bal'ans-krän), n. A crane in which the load is counterbalanced in whole or in part by a weight, swinging with the load, but placed upon the opposite side of the pulley or post balance-dynamometer (bal'ans-di-na-mom'e-tér), n. A form of dynamometer in which the principle of the steelyard is used to estimate the number of foot-pounds of power. The apparatus is attached between two pulleys of which one receives and the other transmits the motive force and is operated by means of loose pulleys, upon which the belts are shifted when it is desired to test the power. Also called brake or transmitting dynamometer. See cut under dynamometer balance-electrometer (bal'ans-é-lek-trom'e-tér), n. A form of absolute electrometer. See electrometer balance-engine (bal'ans-en'jin), n. A steam-engine which has two pistons acting in opposite directions in the same cylinder balance-fish (bal'ans-fish), n. A name of the hammerhead, or hammer-headed shark, Sphyrna malleus, so called because the sides of the head resemble the arms of a balance. Also called hammer-fish. See cut under hammerhead

balance-gate (bal'ans-gät), n. 1 A gate either so supported in the middle, or so counterweighted, that its weight may rest vertically upon the gate-post instead of hanging upon one side of it—2 In hydraulics, a gate having equal areas upon each side of the supporting post, so that the action of a current may not impede its movement balance-level (bal'ans-lev'el), n. A builders' or surveyors' instrument, consisting of a bar exactly balanced and suspended by a cord, and carrying two sights which show the line of level. Sometimes the bar is placed at right angles to a rod, the whole being allowed to hang like a pendulum. A telescope is sometimes substituted for the bar and sights balancement (bal'ans-ment), n. [balance, v., + ment] The act of balancing, or the state of being balanced [Rare]

The law of compensation or balancement
Darwin, Different Forms of Flowers, p. 202 balance-pit (bal'ans-pit), n. In mining, the shaft or excavation in which the balance or counterpoise moves balance-plow (bal'ans-plou), n. A plow in which two sets of plow-hodes and colters are attached to an iron frame moving on a fulcrum, one set at either extremity, and pointing in different directions. The balance plow is intended to be used without turning, and is so arranged as to cast all the furrows in the same direction the one part of the frame being raised out of the ground when moving in one direction and the other when moving in the opposite. It is the front part of the frame, or that furthest from where the driver sits which is elevated of the plowing apparatus connected with the after part being always inserted in the ground and doing the work. Balance plows are used in steam plowing. Generally two, three, or four sets of plow bodies and collars are attached to either extremity, so that two, three, or four furrows are made at once. See plow.

balancer (bal'an-ser), n. 1 One who balances or weighs, a weight of things in or as in a balance.

The need of our modern critical balancers.

Diction. Eng. of World, p. 59.

2 An acrobat, one who balances himself — 3 One who or that which keeps a thing or things in equilibrium, that which maintains or helps to maintain something in a state of balance or equipoise — 4 Specifically, in entom., a halter (which see), a pincer, the small organ supposed to be useful in balancing the body, one of a pair of slender processes with clubbed ends placed near the insertion of the wings, especially of dipterous insects — 5 In herpet., an elongate cylindrical rod protruding from each side of the head of larval salamanders, in front of the gills, permanently retained in certain forms, as the caecilians and some salamanders. L. D. Cop.

balance-reef (bal'ans-rēf), n. Naut., a reef-band crossing a sail diagonally. A balance reef

a sail before reefing, b balance reefed sail

is generally placed in all gaff sails, the band running from the throat to the clew. Either the upper or the lower half of the sail may be reefed.

balance-rudder (bal'ans-rud'er), n. A rudder supported on a skeg or projection from the keel, about one third of its surface being forward of and two thirds abaft its vertical axis of motion. See rudder.

Bal ance rudder

balance-rynd (bal'ans-rind), n. An iron bar stretched across the eye of a revolving millstone, to support the stone upon the top of its spindle.

balance-sections (bal'ans-sek'shonz), n pl. In ship-building, a pair of sections, one near each end of the vessel, which are not designed till after the midship section and the water-line are determined.

balance-sheet (bal'ans shēt), n. A statement made by merchants and others to show the true state of a particular business. A balance sheet should exhibit all the balances of debits and credits, also the value of the merchandise and the result of the whole (bottom). A statement designed to show the assets and liabilities and the profits and losses of a company. (Marsh Bank Book keeping).

Many banks publish balance sheets professing to show the true state of ready money.

Trans. Money and Mech. of Exchange, p. 320.

balance-step (bal'ans step), n. In milit tactics, an exercise in squad-drill intended to teach the principles of marching.

balance-thermometer (bal'ans-thēr-mom'e-ter), n. A device in which mercury enclosed in a balanced tube is caused to make one or the other of the ends preponderate, thereby opening or closing a window or damper, or touching an alarm.

balance-valve (bal'ans valv), n. A valve in which the fluid is admitted to both sides, and acts with nearly equal pressure in opposite directions, but with an excess in the direction of the seat sufficient to keep the valve in contact with it when closed. It is a construction designed to permit the operation of a valve by a slight force. The balance puppet valve has two disks upon a single stem the fluid being admitted either between the two disks or above the upper and below the lower. One disk is made larger than the other, that there may be a slight excess of pressure tending to close the valve, or to keep it pressed to its seat.

balance-vice (bal'ans-vis), n. A small tail-vice used by watchmakers.

balance-wheel (bal'ans-hwēl), n. 1 A wheel in a watch or chronometer which by the regularity of its motion determines the beat or strike — 2 Figuratively, whatever serves for the regulation or coordination of movements.

These are in themselves very objectionable, the true regulators, the proper balance wheels, are those which have been described. Broughan.

Balance-wheel engine, a watchmakers instrument, used in the construction of the balance wheel — Balance-wheel file, a watchmakers file with three sides, one convex and cut the others plane and smooth. It is used in working in the sector rings of a balance wheel — Compensation balance-wheel, a balance wheel whose rim is formed of two metals of different expansive powers, so arranged that the change of size of the wheel, as the temperature rises or falls, is compensated for by the change in position of the parts of the rim.

balandran (ba-lan'dra-nū), n. [ML, OF balandran, F balandras = Sp balandran = It palandrano, palandran, origin unknown] A wide cloak or mantle used as an additional garment by travelers and others in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries. Also called super-tutus.

balanid (bal'n-id), n. A cirriped of the family Balanidae.

Balanidae (ba-lan'i-dē), n pl. [NL, < Balanus + -idae] A family of sessile thoracic cirripeds, of which the genus Balanus is the type. The peduncle is absent or rudimentary, the operculum is present, and the scuta and terga are movably articulated. The species are commonly called acorn shells or sea acorns, and often share the name barnacle with the species of Lepas. They are found all over the world, adhering closely to submerged rocks, timber, etc. Also Balanoida. See cuts under Balanus.

balaniferous (bal-a-ni'f-e-rus), a. [L balanus (< Gr balavos), an acorn, + ferre = F bear!] Bearing, yielding, or producing acorns.

Balaninus (bal-a-ni'nus), n. [NL, < L balanus (< Gr balavos), an acorn, + -inus] A genus of rhynchophorous beetles, of the family Cureculonidae or weevils, the nut-weevils.

B. nucum is the weevil of hazels and filberts, B. glandium and B. rectus, of acorns.

Balanites (bal-a-ni'tēs), n. [L, < Gr balavitis, a precious stone, prop adj (see libos), acorn-shaped, < balavos, an acorn. Cf Balanus] 1. [< Gr] A kind of precious stone, balanite — 2. [NL] A simarubaceous genus of plants, including two species, spiny shrubs or small trees, natives of the drier parts of India, western Asia, and tropical Africa.

The fruit is a one seeded drupe, the pulp of which is sometimes used in India in cleaning silk. The oily seeds, as well as the bark and suberleaves of the Indian species, B. B. borahra, are employed in native medicine, and the hard woody nut is made into a kind of firework. The African species is B. Egyptiaca.

balanitis (bal-a-ni'tis), n. [NL, < Gr balavos, acorn, glans penis, + -itis] In pathol., inflammation of the glans penis.

balanoglossid (bal'a-nō-glos'id), n. A member of the family Balanoglossida.

Balanoglossida (bal'a-nō-glos'i-dē), n pl. [NL, < Balanoglossus + -ida] The family of invertebrates represented by the genus Balanoglossus.

Balanoglossus (bal'a-nō-glos'us), n. [NL, < Gr balavos, an acorn, + glossos, tongue] 1. An extraordinary genus of invertebrate animals, the type not only of a family, Balanoglossidae, but also of an order or even a distinct class of animals, Enteropneusta (which see). It is related in its mode of development to the echinoderms, in some respects to the ascidians, and is usually classed with the

Balanoglossus

1 The Tornaria larva about 1/2 of an inch long enlarged side view. a, anus; b, vessels leading to the dorsal pore; c, from sac of the water vascular system; d, no; prolongation of the sac; e, heart; f, intestine; g, stomach; h, esophagus; m, mouth; n, n, lobes of alimentary canal; mb, muscular band from eye; speck, e, to water vascular sac; ll, young Balanoglossus. Letters as before, except g, the first formed branchial stigmata; III, Balanoglossus, more advanced; c, collar; p, prolocus.

Formae. The members of this genus are elongated footless soft-bodied worms with the mouth at one end of the body and the anus at the other. The fore part of the body presents a kind of collar surrounding a constriction from which springs a long hollow proboscis like organ, whence the name Balanoglossus, this organ being like a tongue somewhat acorn shaped, proceeding from within the collar like an acorn from its cup. On the portion of the body from which the proboscis springs there is a flattened area with a longitudinal series of branchial apertures, communicating with branchial sacs connected with the alimentary canal, hence the term Enteropneusta. In consequence of this relation of the respiratory to the alimentary canal, Huxley associates Balanoglossus with Tunicata (or ascidians) as members of a pharyngopneustal series. The larval form of Balanoglossus was formerly called Tornaria and regarded as an echinoderm from its great resemblance to the larva of a starfish.

2 [< Gr] A member of the genus Balanoglossus.

balanoid (bal'a-noid), a and n. [< Gr balavos, like an acorn, < balavor, an acorn, + -oides, form] 1. A Resembling an acorn specifically applied to the acorn-shells of the family Balanidae. See cut under Balanus.

II. n. An acorn-shell, a cirriped of the family Balanidae.

Balanoides (bal-a-nō'idēs), n pl. [NL, < Balanus + -oides. Cf. balanoid] Same as Balanidae.

Balanophoraceae (bal'a-nō-fō-rā's-sē), n pl. [NL, < Gr balavor, an acorn, + -phoros, bearing (< phero = E bear!), + -aceae] An order of curious apetalous leafless plants, related to the mistletoe, but parasite upon the roots instead of the branches of other plants. From their simple structure, they were formerly thought to be allied to the fungi. There are about 40 known species, grouped into 14 genera natives of the tropics. They are generally of a

balant (bā'lant), a. [< L balan(t)s, ppr. of balare, bleat. Cf baa] Bleating.

The balant and latrant noises of that sort of people. C. Mather, Mag. Christ (ed 1852), App., p. 620.

Balanus (bal'a-nus), n. [L, < Gr balavos, an acorn. Cf L glans, an acorn. See gland] The typical genus of sessile cirripeds of the family Balanidae, the acorn-shells or sea-acorns, called barnacles, except in Great Britain, where the pedunculated Lepadidae have that name. B. tintinnabulum is the representative species. The shell consists of 6 plates, with an operculum of 4 valves. Colonies are to be found on rocks left dry at low water on ships on timber, on lobsters and other crustaceans, and on the shells of conchifers and other mollusks. They differ from the members of the genus Lepas in having a symmetrical shell and in being destitute of a flexible stalk. They pass through a larval stage of exis-

Trigger fish (Balistes capriscus)

see def.] A genus of plectognath fishes, typical of the family Balistidae, containing such species as B. capriscus. They are known as trigger fish, because one large and sharp first ray of the dorsal fin cannot be pressed down until the second ray is depressed, when the first shuts down as does the hammer of a gun when the trigger is pulled.

balistid (ba-lis'tid), n. A fish of the family Balistidae.

Balistidae (ba-lis'ti-dē), n. pl. [NL, < Balistes + -idae.] A family of fishes, typified by the genus Balistes, adopted by different authors with various limits. (a) In Bonaparte's early system, 1842, a family embracing the Balistidae, Triacanthidae, and Ostracodontidae, and thus equivalent to the Sclerodermidae of Cuvier. (b) In Bonaparte's later systems (1840, etc.), a family embracing the Balistidae and Triacanthidae, thus equivalent to the suborder Sclerodermi of Gill. (c) In Swainson's system a family including all the plectognath fishes. (d) In Gill's system, a family of scleroderm plectognaths with reduced rhombiform or more or less spiniform dermal appendages, a compressed body, teeth few in number and more or less compressed, a long peltis, compressed and arcuate, with the tip sometimes prominent and sometimes concealed, and no paired ventral fins or spines. The species are numerous in tropical and subtropical seas and are divided into three subfamilies, the Balistinae, Monacanthinae, and Poacephalinae. See these words. Species are known as trigger fish, file fish, etc.

Balistina (bal-is-ti'nā), n. pl. [NL, < Balistes + -ina.] In Günther's classification of fishes, the second group of his family Sclerodermi, identical with the family Balistidae of recent authors.

Balistinae (bal-is-ti'nē), n. pl. [NL, < Balistes + -inae.] 1. A subfamily of balistoid fishes having few vertebrae (17), an anterior dorsal fin consisting of 3 (rarely 2) spines, of which the first is enlarged and the second locks it in erection, branchial apertures behind the eyes, a compressed ovate form, and rhombiform scales. The most common English names of the species are file fish and trigger fish. The fish is generally but little esteemed, and may even be poisonous, but in some places, as in Bermuda, one of the species of the genus Balistes is highly esteemed and locally called turbot. The skin is used for filing and as a substitute for sandpaper. See cut under Balistes.

2. In early systems of classification, a subfamily embracing the Balistidae and Triacan-

balistine (ba-lis'tin), n. A fish of the subfamily Balistina.

lar etymology. The explanation of ballast as < MLG. bal, = AS balu, bad, evil (see *bale*¹), + last, load, that is, unprofitable cargo, is not satisfactory.] 1 Weight carried by a ship or boat for the purpose of insuring the proper stability, both to avoid risk of capsizing and to secure the greatest effectiveness of the propelling power. A usual modern form of ballast is water, which is pumped in or out of compartments arranged to receive it, lead is also much used, especially for craft of moderate size, and is often run into a space left for it between the plates of the keel, or cast into plates of appropriate form and bolted to the exterior of the keel. Gravel, stones, pig iron, and other weighty materials are in common use as ballast, in cases where the requisite weight cannot be found in the regular cargo itself.
So rich shall be the rubbish of our barks,
Th'en hero for ballast to the ports of France,
That Charles himself shall wonder at the sight
Greene, Orlando Furioso

2. Bags of sand placed in the car of a balloon to steady it and to enable the aeronaut to light-

A dredge Holland

balling¹ (bá'ling), n. [Verbal n. of *ball*¹, v.] The act or process of making into balls; the act of assuming the form of a ball; specifically, in the process of puddling, the forming of the iron into balls or rounded masses of a size convenient for handling.

balling² (bá'ling), n. [Verbal n. of *ball*², v.] The frequenting of balls, dancing. [Rare] balling-furnace (bá'ling-fér'nás), n. [balling, verbal n. of *ball*¹, v., + furnace] 1. A furnace in which piles or fagots of metal are placed to be heated preparatory to rolling. It resembles a puddling-furnace. — 2. A reverberatory furnace used in alkali-works.

balling-gun (bá'ling-gun), n. An instrument for administering to horses medicine rolled into balls. It consists of a tube from which the air is partially exhausted, the ball is held on the end of the tube by atmospheric pressure, and is released by a piston when fairly within the esophagus. E. H. Knight balling-iron (bá'ling-í'ern), n. A hook-shaped tool for removing snow from the feet of a horse.

balling-machine (bá'ling-má-shén'), n. A machine for balling cotton thread.

balling-tool (bá'ling-tól), n. The tool used in collecting into a mass the iron in a puddling-furnace preparatory to taking it to the hammer or squeezer; a rabble.

ballised, a. [Appar for ballised, v. ballisat, pp. of ballisat, surround with pales; see ballisat.] Inclosed with a railing or balustrade. Wotton. (N. E. D.) ballismus (ba-lis'mus), n. [NL., < Gr. βαλλισμός; a jumping about, dancing, < βαλλίζω, jump about, dance. see *ball*².] In pathol., a name which has been given to chorea, to paralytic agitans, and to other forms of tremor.

ballist (bál'ist), n. [Early mod. E. also ballist, < ME. ballist, < L. ballista, ballista see ballista.] Same as ballista. [Rare]

ballista, ballista (ba-lis'tá), n.; pl. ballistae, ballistæ (-tæ). [L., occasionally (in gloss) ballistra, appar. formed on a Greek model, < Gr. βαλλίστρα, throw.] 1. An ancient military engine used for throwing missiles. The different references to it are contradictory, as it is described as acting by means of a bow, but also as throwing large stones rather than darts. An attempt has been made to reconcile these statements by representing the engine as composed of a strong shaft, rotating on one of its ends, and having at the other end a receptacle for the missile, this shaft would be thrown forward by the recoil of a steel bow, and stopped suddenly against a trunnion, thus releasing the missile. Throughout the middle ages the term is used in Latin writings for military engines of different kinds. See trebuchet, manivelle, cable, petronel, pierrrière, and catapult. When used as a bearing in heraldry, the ballista is represented as simplified as to be hardly recognizable. It has generally two upright posts with a movable bar between them, shown loaded at one end.

2. [NL.] In anat., the astragalus, a bone of the tarsus.

ballistic (ba-lis'tik), a. [ballista + -ic.] Pertaining to ballistics, or the scientific construction and use of projectiles. — Ballistic curve, the actual path of a projectile, as distinguished from the theoretical or parabolic path. — Ballistic galvanometer see galvanometer. — Ballistic pendulum, an apparatus invented by Benjamin Robins for ascertaining the velocity of military projectiles, and consequently the explosive force of gunpowder. A piece of ordnance is fired against a cast-iron case filled with bags of sand, which forms the ball of a pendulum, and the percussion causes the pendulum to vibrate. The distance through which it vibrates is measured on a copper arc by an index carrying a vernier, and the amount of vibration forms a measure of the force or velocity of the ball. The ballistic pendulum is now nearly superseded by various forms of apparatus for measuring the time occupied by the passage of the shot from one screen or wire to another. See electroballistic.

ballistics (ba-lis'tiks), n. [Pl. of ballistic. see -ics.] 1. The science or art of discharging large missiles by the use of the ballista or other engine. — 2. The science of the motion of projectiles.

ballistite (ba-lis'tit), n. A smokeless powder containing a large percentage of nitroglycerin similar to cordite.

ballium (bál'i-um), n. [ML., same as *baï*³ and bailey.] 1. Same as *baï*³, 5. — 2. Same as bailey.

ball-joint (bál'joint), n. A jointed connection in which one of the connected pieces has a ball-shaped extremity, fitting a cup-shaped socket in the other.

ball-lever (bál'lev'ér), n. The lever of a ball-cock.

ballon¹, n. [< F. ballon, balon, dim of baller, bale, a bale; in def. 2, obs. form of balloon. see *balloon*¹.] 1. A bale of paper, etc. — 2. Same as *balloon*¹, 1, 2.

balloon¹ (ba-lón'), n. [In some senses also ballon, after F.; early mod. E. baloon, baloune, bulone, ballone, < It. ballone, pallone, a large ball, a foot-ball (now distinguished: ballone, a large bale, pallone, a foot-ball, balloon) (= Sp. balon, a foot-ball, a large bale, = Pg. balão, a balloon, = F. ballon, a fardle or small pack, balon, a little ball or pack, also a foot-ball or balloon" (Cotgrave), now ballon (after It.), a foot-ball, balloon, swelling hill), aug. (in F. prop. dim.) of balla, etc., a ball, bale: see *ball*¹, *bale*³.] 1. A large inflated ball of leather, used in playing certain games; a game played with such a ball. It was tossed to and fro by either hand or foot, the hand being defended by a guard (balloon bracci). See foot-ball.

It was my envied lot to lead the winning party at that wondrous match at balon, made betwixt the divine Astrophel (our matchless Sidney) and the right honourable my very good Lord of Oxford. Scott, Monastery, II. iii

2. In chem., a round vessel with a short neck, used as a receiver in distillation; a glass receiver of a spherical form. — 3. In arch., a ball or globe on the top of a pillar. — 4. In pyrotechnics, a ball of pasteboard or a kind of bomb stuffed with combustibles, which, bursting like a bomb, exhibits sparks of fire like stars. — 5. In weaving, a cylindrical reel on which sized woolen yarn for warp is wound in order to be dried by rapid revolution in a heated chamber. — 6. A bag or hollow vessel filled with hydrogen gas or heated air, or any other gaseous fluid lighter than common air, and thus caused to rise and float in the atmosphere. It is made of silk or other light material, varnished with caoutchouc dissolved in turpentine. A network of twine envelops the balloon, and is tied to a circular hoop a little below it, from which a car, usually consisting of a large wicker basket, is suspended. A valve in the bottom of the balloon can be opened and closed at pleasure by means of a string, and the basket is furnished with sand bags as ballast. If the aeronaut wishes to ascend, he throws out some of the ballast, if to descend, he opens the valve. Balloons have been successfully used for military purposes (see captives balloon, below), and, in the case of beleaguered cities, as a medium of communication with the outside world.

7. In comic engravings, a figure shaped like a balloon and inclosing words which are represented as issuing from the mouth of a speaker. — Captive balloon, a balloon anchored or attached to the ground by means of a rope, which may be either permanently fixed or connected with an anchor which can be raised at pleasure. Such balloons have been employed for military reconnaissance. — Steering balloon, a balloon capable of being steered. One such was invented by M. Dupuy de Lôme during the siege of Paris in 1871. The rudder is said to be able to deflect the machine 11° to either side of the direct line in which the wind is blowing, so that a balloon leaving Paris with the wind straight for Brussels could be landed at either London or Cologne.

balloon-brasseri, n. [< *balloon*¹ + brasser, a form of bracer, after F. brassard, also brassal (Cotgrave): see def.] A brace or guard of wood, used by balloon-players (see *balloon*¹, 1) to protect the hand and arm.

ballooned (ba-lónd'), a. Swelled out like a balloon.

balloon-fish (ba-lón'fish), n. A globe-fish; a fish of the order Plectognathi and suborder Gymnodontes, as the tropical Tetraodon lineatus, or striped spine-belly, or a species of one of the genera Triodon and Diodon. So called because it has the power of swallowing air, which is retained in a dilatation of the esophagus, and thus of blowing itself up into a nearly spherical shape like a balloon. The ivory like tips of the jawbones cleft above and below, as in Tetraodon, give the fish the appearance of having four teeth, two above and two below. See Gymnodontes.

ballooning (ba-ló'ning), n. [< *balloon*¹ + -ing.] 1. The art or practice of ascending in and of managing balloons. — 2. In political and stock-exchange slang, the operation of becoming a candidate, or of inflating the money-market, by means of fictitious favorable reports.

Jefferson, Correspondence, I. 323

balloonist (ba-ló'nist), n. [< *balloon*¹ + -ist.] One who ascends in a balloon; an aeronaut.

balloon-jib (ba-lón'jib), n. A triangular sail made of light canvas, used only by yachts and in light winds, set between the foretopmast-head and the end of the jib-boom.

balloony (ba-lón'ry), n. [< *balloon*¹ + -ry.] The art or practice of ascending in a balloon. Quarterly Rev.

balloon-sail (ba-lón'sál), n. Light canvas used in yachts, as the balloon-jib, the spinnaker, balloon-topsails and -foresails, and the shadow-sail and water-sail.

balloon-vine (ba-lón'vin), n. A herbaceous climbing plant, Cardiospermum Halicacabum,

Balloon vine (Cardiospermum Halicacabum)

ballot¹ (bál'ot), n. [First in the 16th century, < It. ballotta = F. ballotte, balotta, a little ball, esp. as used for voting, a vote, suffrage, = Sp. balota, a ballot (ML. ballotta, dim of balla, a ball: see *ball*¹ and -ot.] 1. A little ball used in voting. Hence — 2. A ticket or slip of paper, sometimes called a voting-paper, used for the same purpose, on which is printed or written an expression of the elector's choice as between candidates or propositions to be voted for. — 3. A method of secret voting by means of small balls, or of printed or written ballots, which are deposited in an urn or a box called a ballot-box. In the former case, each person who is entitled to vote, having the choice of two balls, one white and one black, places a white ball in the box if he is in favor of the resolution proposed, as the admission of a person to membership in a club, or a black ball if he is opposed to it. Hence, to blackball a person is to vote against his election. In the latter case, the ballots or voting-papers are so folded as to prevent the voter's preference from being disclosed, and are usually handed to an authorized officer called an inspector of elections, to be deposited in the box in the voter's presence. The ballot is now employed in all popular elections in the United States, throughout the United Kingdom and the British colonies, and in the national or parliamentary elections in Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, and most other countries of continental Europe. See Manet ballot.

4. A casting of ballots; a vote by ballot; also, the whole number of voters cast or recorded:
